

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2010 with funding from Brigham Young University

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

"HE principal sources whence this Memoir is derived are first an tion to magnify the race whose history he was employed to trace out. He puzzling to recover the main thread. His work, however, is on the whole Account of the Duntreath Family, drawn up by the well-known Genealogist George Crawford, about the year 1713, and written n his hand. His manuscript is compiled with considerable research, but s defective in some important points, with rather too prominent a disposiruns also so much into collateral connexions, that it makes it sometimes a very valuable family document, and without it I should have found extreme difficulty in arranging my memoir. There is likewise another short account, I know not by whom, entitled, 'The Genealogy of the Lairds of Ednem and Duntreth from the year 1063 to the year 1699. This was printed at Glasgow in 1699, and reprinted at Edinburgh by Thomas Stevenson in 1834. It rather enlarges on the connexions of the family about the time the inheritance by will of that branch. It throws some useful light on the early history, but is not continued down very far. An examination into t was compiled, but is otherwise extremely incorrect and of no value whatever. A third document is the pedigree of the Ednam family, for the loan of which I was indebted to Mr. Cranstoun (Lord Corehouse), who obtained chartularies and manuscripts, and such documents as the Advocates' and

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

nearly four hundred years. These lands were acquired by a grant from Robert the Steend, 'cum advocatione Eclesie et Hospitalis ejusdem Johanni de Edmonstoun et Jobelle Comitise de Douglas file nostre arissine, Ab. 1393, and confirmed by a charter of confirmation of Bruce on Walter, fourth Lord High Steward of Scotland, after the battle who died next year in giving birth to King Robert the Second, the first of the Second grants 26 marks annually to John de Iselham for this half of of Bannockburn, on his marriage with Marjory Bruce, the King's daughter, the Stuart line. It was seized by Edward the Third, for there is an ancient charter in the Tower' by which the manor of Edenham is committed to William de Montagu, in the eighth year of that monarch's reign. Indeed a few years earlier (1335) there is a Passport in Rymer's Federa to William de Edenham as one of the 'Nuntii' between 'nos et nostros subditos,' on one side, and 'Robert de Brugs et nabiles Scotiae,' on the other. In the twentyof Edenham with St. Mary's at Berwick to Robert Burton; and in the last year of the same king there is a charter granting half the manor of Edenham, in Roxburgh, to John de Ischham, and in the following year Richard Edenham was one of the confiscated estates bestowed by Robert first year of Edward the Third there is a charter for restoring the Hospital Robert the Third, April 25, 1392.

the manor of Edenham.

Keith, In his account of religious houses, says; 'The Hospital of Ednam was declicated to St. Lawrence, and seems to have been founded below the Ednam was decreapation of this place.' It had, however, been founded as far back as the reign of King William hae Lion, and St. Leonard is spoken of as its tutelary saint in the Register of the Charters of the Great Seal. It may have been restorted and re-declicated by the Edmonstours.

by me zononizations as sold by James Edmondstoune, the last male heir of the elder line of the family, about 1773, and, after passing through other hands, was purchased in 1827 by the last Viscount Dudley and Ward, who, being raised to the Earldom of Dudley, took Edmam as his second title. It is now in possession of his heir, Lood Ward*

* Note 5, Appendix.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

The poet Thomson was a native of this place, of which his father was

The last Laird of Edmondstoune purchased the estate of Cora on the Clyde from a portion of the proceeds of Edman, and there his sisters lived till the death of the last in 1856, who was said to be above one hundred years old. She left the property to Mr. George Cranstoun, who, as Lord of Session, took the title of Lord Corehouse. He rebuilt the house, and greatly improved this most remantic spot.

The Duractath line of the family had previous to the acquisition of that property, their designation from Culloden in Inveness. At what prefixe time Culloden came into their possession has not been ascertained; but it seems to have been obtained from the Serons, since there is a charter by John Dubbar, Earl of Morsy, who married the Lady Marjory eldest daughter of Robert the Second, of the lands of Culloden in Morsy is SI Alexander Seton! There is, moreover, a resignation dated Edibugh, 28th November 1421 by John de Annandin of the lands of Mytal treverred or superiori Domino Settone, witnesses, Archibaldo de Edmistrato Mille et Willelmo filio suo et herede, Willelmo de Annandia Consanguisco meo, et Hugoni de Lindessy, armigerto.

Though the precise time when Culloden was acquired cannot now be discovered, it must have been disting the tenerholour years intervening between 1421, when we find it in possession of the Setons, and 1445, when William Edmonstone de Culloden is mentioned in a charter of that date, why which Dunteath is granted to his son. It was so dd in 1500 by this son, Sir William, to Strachan of Seotstown. Culloden was the well-known scene of the fatal overthrow of the unfortunate Charles Edward in 1746, and which time it was possessed by the Lond President Forbes, and it has ever since, I believe, continued in the same damily.

The Barrony of Duntreath, in the parish of Stathblane and county of Stifling, was acquired in or somewhat previous to the year 1434 tonyor James I. The first notice of it in connexion with the family is in an entry in the Chamberlain's Rolls in the Compost Ballivorum, dated 1434 wherein it is stated that the Bailli of the Cown 'non onerst as de fermia' of Duntreath, because the King has infelt William de Edmonstone with

Note 6, Appendix Note 7, Appendix

er vyilliam de

^{*} Ayloste's Calmilar of Charlers in the Tower, 1772.
* Keith, Catalyne of South Bishops, etc.

them. The earliest mention, however, of Duntreath is of perhaps the middle of the previous century, of a resignation of Donald Earl of Lennox of the lands of Duntreath to his brother Murdoch de Levenox, and there is a notarial instrument referring to this charter of resignation dated 1408. As regards the existing tenure, there is a charter in the family charter cheet of Issobel Duchess of Albany Counters of Lenox, dated 1445, of these lands to William Edmonstone, son of William of Culloden and his wife Mailds Stewart, reserving the liferent to William the father.

There is, moreover, a charter of confirmation of James III, dated Sterling, December 1457, to the same William 'in conjuncta infendations, with William of Culloden and Marion Stewart Countess of Angus, her father and mother, execting the lands of Duntreath into a Barony, with the filters Baronial powers.

Strath-blachan, the valley of the Blachan or Blane, is mentioned as a parish about 1200. It formed part of the vast district called the Levenox or Lennox, extending from the River Leven between the Clyde and Lochlomond, which was erected into an earldom by David I., or his successor Malcolm IV. The Duchess of Albany was eldest daughter and heiress of Duncan viil and last Earl of Lennox of that line, whose violent death, together with that of Murdoc Duke of Albany, his son-in-law, and the two elder of the Duke's sons, Walter and Alexander Stewart, by order of James L on his return from his long captivity in England, forms so striking an event in Scottish history. This event occurred in 1425. The Duchess of Albany succeeded to the title and estates of Lennox, though her possession was probably for a time suspended, as we find the original grant of Duntreath to Sir William Edmonstone to have proceeded from the King. James was murdered in 1437-8, and accordingly, in 1445, we find the Duchess in the exercise of her full rights, by the charter which, among many others, she then granted to William Edmonstone the younger, or probably on the occasion of his marriage with her grand-daughter Matilda Stewart, reserving, however, his father's liferent. In 1450, moreover, she granted the church of Strathblane, with those of Fintry and Bonhill, to her new Collegiate establishment at Dumbarton.1

r new Collegiate establishment at Dumbarton.

The charter of confirmation of 1452, mentioned above, was granted

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

after the Duchess's death, which occurred the beginning of that year, and the succession to the Lennox estates was for several years a matter of great dispute.

The third and only surviving son of the Duke and Duchess of Albany escaped to Ireland, and having formed a connexion with a lady of the name of Macdonald, had by her a large family, seven sons and one Avondale, and was Chancellor of Scotland. His legitimation, however, did not go the length of securing to him the succession of his family, which Elizabeth, wife of Sir John Stewart of Darnley, and the two grand-daughters of Lady Margaret, who had married Robert Monteith of Rusky. An arrangement was at length come to by which the liferent of the Lennox estates was made over to Lord Avondale, through whom the restoration Crown at the Duchess's death, with remainder, according to the Royal Charter of Entail by Robert the Third, 1392, to the above-mentioned heirs of the last Earl Duncan. Of this John Lord Demely (or Damley) received daughter. Three of these sons were afterwards legitimated, and the eldest, Andrew, became a person of great consequence. He was created Lord was disputed by the lieirs of the Duchess's two younger sisters, Lady of the property had been mainly effected, which had been vested in the a considerable portion, and the earldom of Lennox was renewed in his ine, and continued into the Royal Family of Stewart.

me, an commune unto the Again Ample obstanted the same time that Lord Avondale obtained the liferent of the cardom, he procured likewise, from the heirs, a guarantee of the lands of Dunterath to Sir William Emonstone, who was married to his sister Mailda Stewart, and their heirs.

This is proved by a deed of James 111, June 21, 1472-3, stating the investment of Andrew Lord Avondale of the Earldom of Lennox, in liferent, by John Lord Dantley, and also that 'our cousin William Edmonstone of Duntreath be made secure by the said Lord Danniey, which he has by infeffment and gift heritably of our progenitor' James 11.

There is moreover, in the family charter-chest a Renunciation and Grant, dated Eduburgh, Augest 2, of the same year, 1472, by John Earl of Lennox to William Edmonstone of Duntreath, of the Superiority of Duntreath, etc., and of all claim he had thereto, allowing him, the said

Note 11, Appendix.

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

William, to hold the said lands immediately of the King, and for that purpose confirming a charter by King Janes 11. (1452) to the said William in respect of the great kindness, labour, and expense of the said William, in recovering the Earl's part of the Earldom of Lennox.

There is likewise an instrument, dated 27th October of the same year, the hands of buntrath, etc., in Sovour OW William Edonosison, upon a declaration made by another of the heirs and claimants to the Lennox Estates, Elizabeth, grand-daughter of the Lady Elizabeth Montelth, married to John Napier of Merchiston, that in pursuing her claim to a Mouth part of the lands of the Lennox, she makes none on those of the said William Edmonstone.

Lasily, there is an instrument of the 5th of the same month, exempting the Barony of Duntreath from the jurisdiction of the Earl of Lemox's Courts. Nothing was thus omitted to secure to the proprietor of the Duntreath estate the full exercise of his Baronial powers. In the full of 16th the lands and barony of Duntreath were wadsetted or mortgaged, together with the office of Coroner of the Shyre, by Sir James Edmonstore and his son William, to Sir William, Livingston of Kilsyth, referenable on the payment of Co,000 merts, which redemption happily took place sixteen years after (1630) by Archibald, son of the above William, and Duntreath has ever since been the principal seat of the family. A considerable portion, however, of the original estate was never the fortalices belonging to the Lennozes, to which considerable additions were subsequently made. The last of these additions appears to have been made by Sir James Edmonstone about the end of the sixteenth entury, and a stone with the family arms orgraved, with the cypher S. J. E. still never was completed. As the family latterly resided principally in Telah, the boas fell into deesy, and it is said that the factor having received orders to cover a neighbouring farm-house with slates, unroofed the old maxim for that purpose about the middle of het last century.

At what time the Castle was first built is unknown, but it was one of

recovered

Broadisland in the county of Antrim, in Ireland, was purchased the beginning of the seventeenth century, at the period of the plantation of the forfitted estates by James 1. William Endonstone of Duntreath settled there in 1609, and the was the first to introduce and settle a Presbyterian ministery. Edward Bryce, late minister of Drymen, who had been forced to leave Scotland for his opposition to the introduction of Prelacy in 1613. Broadisland continued to be in possession, and Red Hall to be the chief residence, of the analy for several generations; till the estate, having been much reduced, was finally sold by Sir Archibald Edmonstone, the latter end of the eighteenth

Note 13, Appendix.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

The estate of Kilsyth, comprising the East and West Baronies, and the ands of Balincloich or Bancloich, in the parish of Campsie, were purchased by Sir Archibald Edmonstone in 1783. Kelvesith (or Kyllynsith) so designated from the Kelvin water, formed part of the vast territory of the Lennox, originally bestowed by Malcolm III. to Arkyl, a great northern English baron, afterwards erected into the earldom of Levenox or Lennox, in savour of Alwyn, his grandson, by Malcolm IV. The parish was designated Moniabrugh, from a little rivulet which ran through it. The earliest notice of Kilsyth is a charter of Malwyn, third Earl of Lennox, of the lands of Glasshill, Kilsyth, etc., to Eva his sister, and to her husband Malcolm, the son of Duncan Thane of Calendar, about the middle of the thirteenth century. These lands afterwards came into possession of the Fleemings, for there is a grant by Malcolm Fleeming, first Earl of Wigton, of the first creation of the lands of Kyllynsith to Robert De la Vall, an Englishman, whose daughter, Margaret, dying without heirs, they escheated to the Crown, and were granted by King David II. to Sir William Livingston and Christian his wife, daughter and heiress of Patrick Callendar. This charter is dated 13th October 1361. Sir John Livingston, grandson to the above Sir William, who was killed at the battle of Homeldon, gave a grant of the lands of Wester Kilsyth to William, his son by bis second marriage, A.D. 1402, confirmed by a charter of Murdoch Earl of Fife and Duke of Albany to the said William, on the resignation of his mother Agnes, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, 1423. The East Barony of Kilsyth appears to have remained in the hands of the elder branch of the century, to a family of the name of Porter. It now belongs to Mr. Kerr. amily till they were disponed by Alexander Earl of Linlithgow, and his son Lord Livingston, to Sir William Livingston of Kilsyth, upon the payment of $5.000 merks, A.D. 1620. Sir James having suffered much for his attachment to the Royal cause, having been moreover fined by Cromwell to the amount of £1500, and his houses destroyed, was immediately, on the restoration of Charles II, created Baron of Campsie and Viscount of Kilsyth. His eldest son, who succeeded him, died unmarried, but William, Jean, daughter of William Lord Cochrane, and widow of the celebrated Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, by whom he had one son, who that, having been actively engaged in opposition to the Revolution Settlethird Viscount, having engaged in the rebellion of 1715, was attainted, and his estate, valued at £864 per annum, forfeited to the Crown. He married first, both came to their end in the following remarkable manner. It would seem ment of 1638, after the battle of Killiekrankie, he retired to Holland, where the catastrophe occurred which is thus related in a letter of John Hay of the ordinary fuel for fire in that place, and it is thought by the weight of it the roof fell and crushed my Lady and her son and Mrs. Melville to son are embalmed to be brought home. The gentlewoman was buried 'By the post yesterday I had a letter from young Blair out of Utrecht, with a particular but sad accident of the Viscountess of Dundee and her son. He writes that he had dined with her and Kilsyth her husband, and after dinner, just as he had lest them, the Lady and Kilsyth, and a gentleman with them, went into the room where the young child and Mrs. Melville, the Lady's woman, were. The house was covered with turf, death. Kilsyth himself was three-quarters of an hour beneath the rubbish, yet both he and the other gentleman are free of hurt. The Lady and her Carubber to the Earl of Errol, dated Edinburgh, 30th October 1695 :in that place on the 18th instant, old style, after dinner.'1 occasioned attention for a time till the vault was again closed. William Livingston, who succeeded subsequently to the peerage on the death of his brother, married to his second wife, Barbara, daughter of M'Dougal of Makerston, by whom he had a daughter who died young. Lord Kilsyth died In 1795, just a hundred years after, the vault was accidentally opened, and the bodies were discovered in a perfect state of preservation, which at Rome, under attainder, in 1733, and with him the family became extinct.

Note 15, Appendix. The spelling of this letter is modernized.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

:

-

The forfeited estate 1 was purchased first by the York Buildings Company, afterwards by Mr. Campbell of Shawfield, who sold it to Sir Archibald Edmonstone in 1783.

the losses they sustained. I think it probable, as stated in the Original Restoration, but whether on the site of a former one I have no exact when the country was occupied by Cromwell's troops, and after the Restoration there was a claim preferred to Parliament by the inhabitants for Parocliales Scotiae, that this castle stood on the ground now occupied by the later Kilsyth house; but as the tower on the Garrett and that at Colzium were both destroyed, the former probably, the latter certainly, about or at the same time, there is no means, that I am aware of, of accurately deciding to which the memorial in question refers. Colaium was the residence attached to the last barony, which, as stated above, was comparatively a late acquisition to the estate. It was in existence at this Livingston for the purchase, Colzium tower, fortalice, and dependencies are specially mentioned. This was in 1620. It is likewise made over as the dower house, on the marriage of Sir James Livingston with Euphemia There is an old stone taken from the ruins with the date 1575, but I There are vestiges of two ancient residences, one on the Garrett Burn, northward of the town, the other nearly on the site of the modern house at Colzium. Besides these, the last residence of the Kilsyth family stands nearly entire, adjoining the church. This latter house was built after the means of ascertaining. The house of Kilsyth was burnt in the time period, for, in the contract between the Earl of Linlithgow and Sir William Cunningham in 1647. As to the period of its erection there is no clue. should think this would refer to later additions, not to the original foundation of the old tower of Colzium.

till the year 1647. The old church, which stood in the churchyard at The Western Barony of Kilsyth belonged to the parish of Campsie some distance from the town, was pulled down, and the present one built

The battle of Kilsyth, the scene of Montrose's great victory, was fought on the high ground to the east of Colzium. Many local names in 1815. The patronage is vested in the Crown. preserve the record of that memorable event.

1 Note 16, Appendix.

Note 17, Appendig.

CADET BRANCHES

I am not aware that any one bearing the name of Edmonstone claims descent from the elder or Ednam line,1 nor can trace connexion with it. There is a family settled in Shetland, the first of which, Andrew Edmondston, a minister of the church, emigrated there in Queen Mary's time, but the present descendants know nothing of their origin.

Of the known cadets of the Duntreath stock, that of Spittal or Broick is the only one which yet remains in the male line. For several generations, till the death of the late Archibald Edmonstone, they were hereditary baillies on the Duntreath estate. A curious notice of directions, given by the justices to the heritors of several parishes, ordering the regular payment of' Black Mail' to Captain M'Gregor, a predecessor of the celebrated Rob Roy Macgregor, dated Sterling, 3d February 1658-9, is addressed 'For Archibald Edmonstone, Bailzie of Duntreath, to be published at the kirk of Strathblain.

The illegitimate branch of Cambus-Wallace became, I believe, extinct some years ago, by the death of Mr. James Edmondstone of Newton-

COAT OF ARMS.

The arms of the family of Ednam, as given in Nisbet's Heraldry, were 'a camel's head and neck.' These bearings seem attested by a seal attached to a charter of the year 1612, whereby the lands of Edmonstone were made over to Mr. Thomas Hope, Advocate, as far as the shield and crest are concerned; at least the crest looks as if it were intended for a camel's head and neck; there are, however, no supporters. But the crests Nisbet, the arms of the Duntreath branch are stated to be 'three crescents or, three crescents gules, supported by two camels proper;' and for crest, became subsequently changed for a globe surmounted by a cross. In gules, with the annulet in the ceur,' so illuminated in the house of Fala Hall, which, with the lands of Fala, belong to Ednam. No mention of the crest supporters or tressure, though an engraving of the arms complete is given as now worn. On a stone at Duntreath the arms are engraved Note 20, Appendix, Note 19, Appendix Note 18, Appendix.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

with the double tressure and annulet, the shield resting on a camel, with the cypher S. J. E., doubtless Sir James Edmonstone, which would fix it to the latter part of the sixteenth century.

of an earlier date. There is a seal of William Edmonstone appended to a resignation of his lands by William Graham of Garvock into the hands of James III., because, as it is stated in the deed, 'sigillum proprium non habui sigillum fratris mei Willielmi de Edmoundstone de Duntreath ptibus upponi.' They were uterine brothers, being both sons of the Countess of Angus. Of this deed there is a copy in the family charter chest, with a representation of the seal, in which the arms are laid down without the unnulet, and with the supporters as now used. This copy 1 was made at Edinburgh in 1712, and is duly attested. It would seem that it was rampant as supporters, to matriculate the bearings of Edmonstone of The authority, however, on which the arms as at present worn rests is procured by Crawford the antiquary, who moreover states that, 'upon the Laird of Duntreath producing this deed before the Lord Lyon King at Arms. Sir Alexander Erskine of Cambo, Baronet, showing that his ancestors had been in use to carry and wear the double tressure about their paternal coat of arms as a tessera and mark of their Royal descent, and that they had been likewise in use, time out of memory, to wear two lions Duntreath, conform to the old seal in his registers, and gave out an extract as usual in the like case, and yet it is strange Mr. Nisbet, in his late system of Heraldry, has not taken the least notice of it ance, though the seal had not been preserved entire. There certainly is In 1828 Mr. Riddell made a copy of the original Garvock deed, as also of the seal, which differs however from the above in having the annulet There is also this farther difference; in my copy there is a helmet surmounted by a coronet, out which rises a crest, which is thus described. supra cassidem stat corona antiqua ex qua oritur caput cygni vel alterius similis volucris, cum collo et rostro.' But in Mr. Riddell's copy there are the helmet and coronet but no crest, of which he says there was no appearno trace of a crest in his sketch.

tablet with a Latin inscription, and on each side sixteen coats of arms; one Moreover, in the chapter-house of the Cathedral of Dunkeld there is a

1 Note 28, Appendix,

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

of these is the Edmonstone coat, without the annulet, with 'Duntreth' The chapter-house was erected by Bishop Lauder in 1469. but there is, I believe, no date attached to the tablet. underneath.

Crawford, in his Manuscript Genealogy, has paid particular attention to the double1 tressure, flowered and counter-flowered, in the Duntreath coat It was adopted by several of the principal Scottish families, and at one time as a mark of Royal descent. This was, however, by no means universally the case, since neither the Douglas or Hamiltons, for instance, wear it; and it was never assumed by the elder branch of the Edmonstone family, though descended from the Countess of Douglas, daughter of King Robert the Second, as the Duntreath line was from the Countess of Angus, daughter of King Robert the Third. Whether it was originally considered as a right, does not appear, but it came to be so, for in the reign of George the First quence of his descent from Robert the First, and it was allowed him. It was adopted by William Edmonstone, son of the Countess of Angus, as is the Earl of Sutherland claimed this honourable augmentation in conseshown by his seal, as it was by his uterine brothers, Kennedy of Dunure and Graham of Fintry.

But by much the most remarkable part of these heraldic bearings is the coronet? out of which the crest rises. This, so common now, is not First or Charles the First, at which time, too, the lower hereditary peerage, referable in Scotland, at least to an earlier period than that of James the Viscounts and Barons, assumed coronets in imitation of those of England. The coronet in the Duntreath crest, now resembling the modern ducal, with three instead of five strawberry leaves in the draft, taken, as mentioned above, from the Garvock seal, more resembles an Earl's without the balls. What this addition to the armorial bearings of the family implied it is now useless to speculate upon; that it was, however, an unusual distinction, connected either with the Royal descent or some peculiarity in the grant of the Duntreath portion of the great Earldom of Lennox, can scarcely be doubted. From a stone at Duntreath with the arms of Sir James Edmonstone, I am inclined to think the crest was originally the head and 1 Double tressure. The double tressure was supposed to have been introduced into the Royal arms to perpetuate the ancient League between Scotland and France. Note 22, Appendix.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

neck of a camel, and not of a swan, the same as that of the elder line. The we would be much alike.

SENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT.

Beavold was the name of the reigning Count at the time of Margaret's gether with the dispersion of national documents by the policy of Edward t. religious houses and cathedrals, make this remarkably the case in Scotland. But in proportion as authentic records are defective, vague tradition prevails, and to trace an imaginary descent from a remote and noble stem is a piece of vanity, by none more freely indulged than our northern genealogists. It is accordingly stated in Crawford, and in another manuscript account, that the Edmonstone family was supposed to be descended from a younger branch of the Counts Egmont of Flanders, in the person of an Edmundus who came to Scotland with Margaret, sister of Edgar the Atheling, on her marriage with King Malcolme Canmore. If this descent could be proved, it would certainly be a very honourable one. Bocken-The origin of the most ancient samilies is in most countries uncertain, and the radeness of the people down to a comparatively late period, toand still more the destruction of Scottish records at the time of the Reformation, which were lodged in the chapter-houses or consistories of bergius, the historian of the family of Egmont, states that it sprung from Radbodus, son of Aldgillus King of Frisia, A.D. 739, and that it was fixed at Halbernum, now Egmont, by Adelburt, son of the King of the Deii. marriage, and unluckily there is no mention of any collateral branch migratng at this period to Scotland.

and obtained settlements from Malcolm. Geddes, the author of the life of, the tyranny of William the Conqueror, several of the Saxon Barons, who When Edgar took refuge in Scotland, with his mother and sisters, from had been endeavouring to resist the Norman invader, accompanied him, St. Margaret, states, though I should think somewhat apocryphally, that Agatha, the mother of that Princess, and Edgar was attended by a ollowing of Hungarian nobles, from whom several Scottish families sprang. The fact, however, that these descendants of the rightful line had been resident at the Court of Edward the Confessor for ten years since their recall by that Monarch from Hungary, would render it very unlikely that they were accompanied to Scotland by many, if by any nobles from Hungary.

Note 23. Appendix

That the Edmonstone family descended from a Saxon Baron is in he highest degree probable, but whence that Baron came is the question. Sir James Dalrymple, in his 'Collections,' has the following notice. After mentioning in the charters of David the First to Holyrood Abbey, one to which Thoraldus de Trevernent (Tranent) was witness, and also one of the said Thoraldus, confirming to the Abbey the claim he had to the Church of Tranent, Sir James adds, 'To the charter of the fore-mentioned, Thoraldus Admundus filius Forn and Admundus de Fageside are witnesses. If this he gave the name of the lands of Edmonstone, near to Edinburgh, and simame, to the possessors of those lands. The Edmonstones are repute an ancient family there. King David the Second gives a charter barony of Edenham, bearing him to be married to Issobel, Countess of Douglas, the King's daughter. Since this time the family has been designed of Edenham, and the aforesaid charter is to be seen in the hands of the Laird of Ednam. The other, Admundus Fageside, was probably predecessor to the Fairsides of that ille. Sir James Dalrymple Is a respectable authority; this is however but mere unsupported conjecture, be the Forn mentioned, a witness in the charter of King Alexander the First to Scone, it gives an ancient pedigree to Admundus. Perhaps to John Edmonstoun of the Crownership of Edinburgh. I suppose the same person gets a charter from King Robert the Second of the

and as such indeed he gives it is.
There is year a farther idea thus stated by Craufurd: 'Others again, and perhaps with full as great probability, think that the family and the original ancestor of the Edmonstones are of the same stock, blood, and kindred with those of the sirmame of Seaton and Oliphant. To support this conjecture they think the one and the same common arms of the Edmonstones with those other two noble families, the three crescents, goes far to confirm the difference among them being only the inteture or colours. As regards the Oliphants, there is nothing but this identity of armorial bearings to support the notion, but there are some striking coincidences with respect to the Setons which gives to my mind considerable weight to the conjecture of a common origin.

1 Sir James Dalrymple's Callections conterming Solitals History, 1705. Appendix, P. 479.

* Chartelory of Sone, Dannatyne and Maistand Clubs.

Armonial bearings and simanes began to be adopted in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. The latter became geineral in private families in the course of the thirteenth. Sir James Ballour says, wonts ancient sinames, and of best account, have been local, deduced from towns, caider, places, villages, hamlets, affording simanes to their locks and possessors. Among a list of names thence derived, he mentions Edmonstone, and in their enumerating a number of family appellations which have existed, he says, six hundred years, is Admistone or Edmistonne.

he says, six hundres years, a Annumoune, the says, six hundres years, a Annumoune of The anne is evidently formed by 'Edmund', with the addition of 'towar'. Regarding town, Elf Tennie Palgeve thus writes! "The fars and purinary element of the Anglo-Saxon state appears to be the community which in England, during the Saxon period, was called the Town or Township. Thus, and a derived from Tyman, to enclose, denoting in its primary sense the enclosure which surrounded the mere homestead or dwelling of the lord. It seems to have been gradually extended to the whole of the hand which constituted the domain." In Scotland the term still retain nearly its original meaning, which is thus given by Chalmeer: A baron obtained from the king a grant of lands which is estimated to the whole of the land which, in the practice of the age, was called the "Two of the Baron."*

Now it is a remarkable diremnstance over and above the identity of Now it is a remarkable diremnstance, where the mane certainty arose, lie in the mids to federomotone, where the name certainty arose, lie in the mids to the great estates once possessed by the Settons and the two families seem at an early period to have been connected, for there is a charter of John Dunbay, Earl of Monay, of the lands of Culloden, in 'Moravia, I'o Sir Alexander Setton, which charter is without date; but John, second son of Partick Dunbar, minh Earl of Dunbar, by Lady, Agnes, daughter and heiress of Thomas Randiph, Earl of Monay (erdently the person referred to in the charter), obtained the grain of the 1818m, Monay Agnes, Horry of the Charter), behained the grain of the 1818m, Monay agnesses.

Sir Jama Bolfour on Sirnoma. Advocates

· Chalmers' Caldonia, vol. 1. page 504.

.

George, the fifth Earl and eleventh Baron, was attainted for his concern in another branch of the Seton family the ducal House of Gordon, now Mar-From these various causes I think it highly probable that an Edmund of the race of Seton received the lands of Edmonstone in Midlothian as his appanage, to which he gave his name, and that from him the family is descended. Nor is the stock an ignoble one. According to Douglas, the Setons are of Norman extraction. Secher, son of Dougal de Say, obtained ands in East Lothian from David the First, and hence the name Say-town. At a later period the family rose into great distinction. The chief branch was ennobled as Barons Seton in 1448, and as Earls of Winton in 1600. the rebellion in 1715, and, having died without male issue in 1745, the Earls of Eglinton, who were Setons in the male line and Montgomeries only in the female, became heirs-male of the family. The title by a specialty was saved from forfeiture, and the Earldom of Winton was accordingly taken up by the present Earl of Eglinton in 1840. From quisses of Huntley, descend; and cadets were raised to the peerage as Earls of Dumfermline, and also as Viscounts Kingston, now extinct.

Presenting, therefore, that the Setons may be the original stem, at what period did the House of Edmontone appear as a distinct family? This it is impossible to fix precisely, but there is ground for reterning it to about the commencement of the chirteenth century. The earliest mention of the name I have met with its an assignation of lands by Johannes de Gallard to the abby of Dumfermline, to which Henricus de Edmundiston is witness, dared at Musselburgh, 1348, tempore Alexander tt. The same person is moreover, referred to four years later, in charter of mortification, by William de Casignillar, whereby he gives in alms, to the church and abby of Dumfermline 'quandam toftum fetere in Casignillar, in Austral, in Aust parte qui ducit de villa de Noddriff (Niddry), ad ecclesiam de Libertoun quas Henricus de Edmondston de me tenet.' This is dated 1252.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

There is another document, however, yet, a few years earlier as it would seem, but without a day, effering to a generation one degree further back. An indenture between 'Doninum W. Abbatem et conventum de Dunfeilin ex und parte et H. filtim E. ex alia, super multura de Edmunditum, whereby it is settled that the said H. and his heir, to preserve peace, et jam motal lite sedandi; should pay every year twenty prinjings in done pipus H. apped Edmunditum, to de de de convert. There is further permission for the erection of a mill, simbly, and brewhouse. To this deed the seals (signa) 'Domini Nessi de Rames' and brewhouse. To this deed the seals (signa) 'Domini Nessi de Rames et Magfarit petul' de Rames', together with the seals or signatures of 'memorali Henrici' are appended! As Henricus is herein designated as the son of E, this may not improbably be the Edmund with whom the thaily commerceted. Fiffur, however, does not necessarily imply som, as it is not unusual to apply it to a mose distant descent in the direct line.

The next hundred years there is a blank in the family history, and so far may be said to its honous, that its name is not found in the 'Ragman Rolls'—the list, namely, which has been preserved of those, comprising great proportion of the nobility and gentry of Scotland, who subscribed their submission and feally to Edward 1. at the end of the thirteenth century. From whatever cause this may have arisen, it is a circumstance that cannot be regretted.

The next notice we have is a retour or inquest before the Bailie of Musselburgh in 1359, impurer David in declaring that 'Henicus de Edmundiston, formety' Dominus ejustem, had died, and that Johannes de Edmundiston was his legitimate son and heir, and then it is added they haded of the Abbey of Dumfershiline, and hart the said land, valuit tempore bonse pacit, xill; ills, wi, sol, viii, d, and now values ten pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence. John, too, is stated to be of lawful age, but the, inden had had had be in ward, the grant of which was to Sir John Preston, evidently of Cerigmillar, which is close by.

This document connects the links of the broken chain, for we find the 'Nees at Angeweit. 'Charming of Designation, Banasias Clark F 140 family still in the same spot, holding of the same superiors, and the Christian name of Henry still preserved, which however was never continued. From this time the line of descent is uninterrupted.

Note 17, Appendix.

Note 25, Appendix.

Crauford, however, and the other Duntreath genealogies, refer them all to The historical notices of Sir John Edmonstone are very copious. one person, but in the Ednam pedigree two are mentioned in succession, and it is quite evident that this is correct.

tion. On the restoration of tranquillity, the King proceeded as aforesaid to England to negotiate with Edward, and Sir John Edmonstone was tion for the ultimate cession of the crown of Scotland to the King of John de Edmonstone, as stated above, was served heir to his father in 1359. This gentleman seems to have been in favour, and to have been much employed during the unfortunate reign of David II. In 1352 he was appointed by charter coroner to the district of Lothian, to himself his heirs and assigns,1 but by another charter, ten years later, this grant was restricted to his life. In 1363 he accompanied King David 11. to England, as there is a passport for John de Edmundiston coming to England, in which he and John de Abemethy are designated as 'valeti's to David Bruce, with six of his knights. The King's object in this visit was, having paid only two moieties of his ransom, and being unable to raise the remainder, to negotiate peace, the terms of which were to have been the reversion of the crown of Scotland to Lionel, Duke of Clarence, Edward III's son, in the event of himself dying without issue. It is singular that, on this occasion, four foreign kings met together in London, John of France, who died in April of that year, Waldemar of Denmark, Peter of Cyprus, besides Albert, Duke of Bavaria. David had proposed this succession to a Parliament assembled at Scone in the commencement of the year 1363, and on the unanimous rejection of it, accompanied by hostile appearances, had recourse to arms against his barons, but the rising was terminated by an amnesty granted to them on condition of their dissolving their associaeither sent before, or accompanied him. The event of this farther negotia-England is given in Dalrymple's Annals.

In 13663 this gentleman was again employed in a mission, with six Rymer's Federa of Rot. See. In Tar. Lond. Note 28, Appendig.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

for himself and six knights, and in 1369 for fifty, probably negotiating the terms of the truce, which was settled for a farther space of fourteen years. and making arrangements for the payment of the £24,000 still due of King David's ransom, at the rate of £4000 per annum. The truce was concluded at the Castle of Edinburgh, 20th July 1369, and was signed by knights as his companions, 'veniendo peregre ... et exinde versus partes transmarinas usque Sanctum Johannem Ambiavensem et alia loca sancta ranseund.' Amiens, I imagine; and the following year there is a passport or the same number on their return. In 1367 he again receives a passport John de Edmondiston Miles, among others of the chief nobility.

with dominus Duncano Wallays going, the 24 men in partes extremas for one year. This would appear to be a mission to Rome, for in the et Domino Johanni de Edmondiston transcuntibus in negotiis Regis ad cuream Romanam pro expensis suis lib. 466, 13s. 4d.,' while there are other David 11. died in the beginning of 1371, nor does Sir John appear in less favour or confidence with his successor Robert II. There is a passport in the year 1372, 'domino Johanni de Edmondiston' coming to England, and returning with twelve men; and in the following year to the same Exchequer rolls there is notice of payment, ' Domino Duncano Wallays payments for expenses in England.

interposition with the Pope and Cardinals to procure a favourable decree in a suit before the papal judicatory at the instance of Margaret Logie, Queen of Scots; also demanding reparation for depredations on Scots traders by Norman pirates. The deed is in form of a notorial instrument, in which King Robert's letter and King Charles's answer, both in French, are verbatim inserted. King Robert's ambassadors were, Mr. Adam de Tynningliam, Dean of Aberdeen, Sir Dunean de Wallays, and Sir John de Edmondstone; The same Commissioners, with the addition of Adam of Tynningham, Dean of Aberdeen, were again employed apparently on the same business. There is a charter of an embassy from Robert the Second 1 to Charles the Fifth of France, dated Jan. 31, 1374, i.e. 1375, soliciting the French king's charter of a grant to him of King David of the lands and barony of Boyn, Nor were Sir John Edmonstone's services unrequited. There is a

:

We next find him engaged in a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. In 1381 there is a passport for Alexander de Lindesay, also for Patrick de Hepburn, chevalier, with twelve men and twelve horses. Likewise for John de Abernelliy with six men and six horses, also for John de Edmonstone, chevalier, with sixteen men and sixteen horses, and John de Tours, chevalier. The next year there are passports for their return. Lastly, there is a permission from Richard the Second to John de Edmonstone to take 200 quarters of malt with his own vessels from a port on the coast of Lincolnshire to any port he pleases in Scotland.

Whom this gentleman married, or when he died, there is no account. and in this respect I think the Ednam pedigree more correct than Crau-That he was succeeded by a son of the same name there can be little doubt; ford's, which makes only one generation. Whether he may not have had a second son, Archibald, from whom the Duntreath family is descended, will be inquired into hereaster; moreover, if that very apocryphal work, 'The Memorie of the Somervilles,' can be trusted, he had a daughter, Margaret, married to Sir John Somerville of Carnwath. I give the passage at length : 1-

'In October the same year, 1372, John, eldest son and appearing heir to Walter, Baron of Carnwath, being at Court with his father, there was none more taken notice of than this young gentleman. Being of a comely personage, assable and courteous, he gained the affection of all he conversed with; but that which contributed most to the young gentleman's advantage was his acquaintance with Sir John Edmondstowne, donator to the forfaulture of Sir Robert Baird, whose gift of forfaulture this gentleman, Sir John by virtue thereof possessed at this time the Barony of Cambusnethan. It was with this old gentleman, Sir John Edmondstoune, that young Lintoune Edmondstoune, had obtained from King David Bruce in anno 1345, and (Somerville) bare company both at the Court and in the country, because of the pleasantness of his humour, and in regard he was in much favour with he King as he had been with his predecessor King David. But that which engaged this young gentleman entirely was the great affection he bare to the beautiful daughter of Sir John Edmondstoune, who, being her father's only child, was appearing heiress of a fair estate, and that lying seld all ward of the King, whereas the Barony of Cambusnethan held slenche of the Crown for a pair of gilded spurs, which is the Reddendo of the charter of that Barony. This lady, what for her beauty and great estate and many suitors of as good quality and fortune as this gentleman, but he played his game so well by engaging the lady's affection, who was then in the twenty-fourth year of her age, which was much about that of his own, and seing obsequious to the old Sir John Edmondstoune in all he was pleased command him, that he at length obtained his consent to let him have his daughter, and with her the Barronie of Cambusnethan. This business was brought to tryst (formal meiting) at Lanark the same month, and in November thereafter the marriage was solemnized, to the great satisfaction of the parties themselves and all their honourable relations.' Some pages urther, the following notice: -'In August the same year, 1398, his virtuous Lady Margaret Edmondstoune dies, having lived with her husband twentyeight years, during which time she had borne to her husband nine children. ive whereof survived herself, two sons and three daughters. She was buried, at her own desire, in the Quyer of Cambusnethan church. She was a lady of many eminent virtues, and was the third female that made within the same shire where the greatest part of his father's estate lay, which a great addition to the Barons of Linton, their estate in Scotland," .

Memorie of the Somertilles, vol. L. page 130. Fist . Rymer's Folia at Rotali Sotias.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

Whether a fair daughter of Sir John Edmonstone did at this time marry into the house of Somerville there is no other authority for deciding, but that she took the estate of Cambusnethan with her is a complete mistake. This estate was acquired by the Somervilles by Janet Stewart's marringe with Thomas de Somerville. It had been forfeited, as is stated in 'the Memorie,' by the Bairds, for treason against Robert Bruce, and was granted by his son, King David, to Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley, grandfather to the aforesaid Janet. There is a note by the Editor of the Memoric of the Somervilles to the above effect, and he confesses, that the more ancient part of the narrative is particularly deficient."

SENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

:

negotiating the Earl of Douglas's release on the payment of a thousand England and Scotland, dated Westminster, 27th April 1409. The restoramatters still remained in a very unsettled state between the two countries.8 Previous to these transactions, we find Sir John Edmonstone's name as one of the cautioners to Haco v., King of Norway, for Henry Sinclair, who had been appointed by that King Earl of Orkney and Shetland, having been so The next authentic notice of Sir John Edmonstone probably refers to the second of the name. Like his father, he seems to have been much England for a year, during which a congress was to be held in order to bring about a peace. For this they received full powers, dated 'Linlithgow, 24th August, 15 year of our reign." It seems probable that the seeret negotiation' Tytler speaks of, for surrendering the Earl of Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph, who had taken refuge in Scotland after the battle of Shrewsbury, in return for Murdoch (Shakespeare's Mordake, Henry 1v.), Albany's eldest son, and the Earl of Douglas, who had been taken first at Homeldon and afterwards at Shrewsbury, was committed to the above persons. On the death of Robert the Third, 1408, when the Regent Albany wanted to establish his power by permanent peace with England, he sent as Commissioners, John Montgomery of Ardrossan, John Douglas, the Earl's brother, and John Edmonstoune, knight, who succeeded in merks ransom, and leaving a sufficient number of hostages, and the following year we find a passport for William Hay, hereditary Sheriff of Peebles (Vicecomes), John Edmonstone, and William Borthwick of Ledgewood, knights, invested with powers for settling a peace, or at least a truce, between tion of the Earl of Douglas seems now to have been finally arranged, but nominated likewise by the King of Scotland, for maintaining order and employed, for in 1404 (temp. Robert 111.) he was appointed one of the Commissioners, together with Matthew Glendinning, Bishop of Glasgow, Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, and others, for negotiating a truce with keeping down piracy in the islands. This was in 1379,

This gentleman' had the honour of contracting a Royal alliance, for Lond., and Tytler's Hatery of Sections, vol. iii. . Abereromby, Mortial Askinvments, vol.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

he married the Lady Isabel, daughter of King Robert II., by his second wife Eufemia Ross, relict of Randolf, Earl of Moray. This lady had married, in 1371, James 11. Earl of Douglas and Mar, who was killed at the battle of Otterburn in 1388, by whom she had no children, and secondly,

Sir John Edmonstone.

By this marriage Sir John had one son, David. The family pedigree makes out William, from whom the Duntreath family are descended to have been a second son, but this will be shown to be erroneous."

thus be his father-in-law, malies this connexion more probable; besides the century before the last, there is one to John Edmond, knight, the King's brother, and Elizabeth Sinclair his spouse, daughter to the Earl of Orkney of the lands of Murtache, vicecom. Bamif, by resignation of the Earl of Orkney. Douglas, in his Peerage, says Edmond is a mistake for Drummond, but it is more likely to have been Edmondstone, the last syllable being accidentally omitted, and who was the King's brother-in-law, as well as Sir John Drummond. The circumstance of Sir John Edmonstone having stood cautioner for the Earl of Orkney, as mentioned above, who would which, this Sir John's predecessor had had a grant of the Barony of Boyne the lists of the missing Royal Charters now lost, though preserved through There seems reason to believe that Sir John married, serondly, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Sinclair Earl of Orkney, for among

At what time Sir John Edmonstone died does not appear, but it must have been after 1410, probably 1412, or 1413, for there is an 'agreement by way of indenture,' dated Perth, April 7th, 1410, between Sir John Edmonstone of that ilk and Davy Edmonstone, his son and heir, with Patrick (Graham) Earl of Strathern, in the right of his wife, and with her consent, relating to a charter of confirmation they had procured from the Regent Duke of Albany, to Sir John Edmonstone and his son, of the lands and barony of Tillyallan in Clackmannanshire.* in this identical vicecomitatus of Bamff.

There is, moreover, a charter granted by the same Regent to his son-John Earl of Buchan in 1413, in which Sir David is styled 'nepos noster," as son to his (Robert, Duke of Albany's) sister, the Countess of Douglas.

Note 32, Appendig

Note 30, Appendix. Note 31, Appendig

Register of the Great Seal.

ii. page 400. Rymer's Felera. Abereromby, Martial . Tyder, Haloy of Scallant, vol. iii , p. 153. Physics's Federa of Ketalt Sectio, in Tur. Achievments, vol. ii. 1-2ge 222.

Crauford speaks of having seen several charters 'in our archives' with a similar designation.

Agnes, daughter of Robert Maitland of Thirlstane, but there is no evidence have been born before 1391, in 1426 there is an inquest serving James Edmonstone as heir to his father. The terms of the inquest are thus given Sir David Edmonstone married, according to the Ednam pedigree, to prove this connexion. He died in the prime of life, for as he could not in the Cartulary of Dunsferline. 'Compertum est quod quondam David Edmonston de codem pater Jacobi Edmonston nune de codem abiit ad fidem et pacem S. D. N. Regis in terris de Hallis et quod dietus Jacobus est legitimus et propinquior heres quondam David de Edmonston, patris sui. This is dated September 1426. Likewise a charter for appointing John de Edmonston, Tutorem dativum of all the lands of James Edmonstone, son and heir of David Edmonston of Ednam, until he attain lawful age. him as witness to a public instrument, in which William and Patrick, Who this John Edmonstone was docs not appear, but there is a notice of Abbots of Dumferline and Cambuskenneth, and Walter, Abbot of St. Colme, are concerned, dated 1420. The tutor dativus that is appointed specially by the Crown need not be a near relation. Probably, however, this John was a cousin of the Culloden or Duntreath branch. This, however, is mere supposition.

In 1430 James Edonostone, though still a boy, was knighted by James the First. This was occasioned by the birth of twin sons to the King, who were immediately on their lospitism knighted, and the same favour was conferred on the youthful lexits of the Earl of Douglas, Lord Crichton, Lord Bouthariek, and other members of the nobility.

Sir James married, first, Isabella, daugitter of Sir John Porrester, ancestor of Italia daugitter of Sir John Porrester, John, who succeased him; and secondly, Javet, daughter of Sir Alexander Myrier of Mechiston, ancestor of the Lord Napier by whom he had no adaghters; Italiachth, married to Sir Patrick Hocksader, second son of Backadder of that He; and second, Margaret, married to Sir Walter, second son of Sir Walter, Ogilvie of Auchberen, from which marriage descended son of Sir Walter Ogilvie of Auchberen, from which marriage descended.

1 Tytler's History of Scotland, vol. iii. p. 275, on the authority of Fordun. Note, endin.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

the Ogivies, Lords Bamff, extinct in the male line in 1803. The estates of Tylyallan and of Bryone went out of the family by these marriages, which led to the erroneous notion, both in Caudord's and the Ednam pedigrees. This matter is entered into a tenoiderable longth in the notes. By a family arrangement the estates of Boyne and Tillyallan, which had been divided, were separated, so that Elizabeth, Lady Blackader, had the whole of Tillyallan, and Margaret, Lady Ogivie, the whole of Boyne. I am ignorant if the latter property contiguous to the town of Banff yest remains in the Ogivie family, but I believe it has passed into the hands of the Earl of Scanfed. Tillyallan, was purchased by the late Viscount Keith, and is now the property of his daughter, Countess Flahault, Baroness Naime and Keith, in her own right.

the truth, after stating that, on the termination of the elder branch in females, Edmonstones got the estate and lands of Edmonstone, and assumed the search and enquiry into the publick offices, found any vouchers to instruct stones of Duntreath have a clear connexion; so that it appears to me these latter Edmonstones of Edmonstone may be but singular successors, passage in the manuscript which has been carefully erased, indeed appears Sir James was succeeded in the natrimonial estates of Edmonstone and Ednam by his son John, and here I must notice the wholly unauthorized attempt of the Duntreath family to ignore the continuation of the elder branch. Crauford, who, like most of the older genealogists, seemed more desirous of flattering the vanity of his employers than of investigating Sir David's two daughters (which has been shown to be incorrect), the Dunreath became the direct male line, says, 'but although another set of litle and designation of Edmonstone of that ilk, yet I have not, upon all my and document what relation in blood these later Edmonstones of that ilk had to the more ancient Barons of I'dmonstone, and to whom the Edmonand might have acquired the ancient estate though they might not be legal lineal heirs, but a remoter collateral branch of the family.' Then follows a imperfect. The worthy genealogist, however, becomes elsewhere more enightened on the subject, for, in his manuscript Baronage, in the Advocates' Library, Crauford states 'that the later house of Edmonstone (the Ednam aranch) is descended from John Edmonstone, brother of Sir James, who thus far, I shall continue it in an Appendix, and proceed to the Duntreath son of Sir John and the Countess of Douglas, is stated to be the first in both the Ednam and Duntreath pedigrees. This connexion, however, has Having brought down the descent of the elder branch of the family line, the more immediate object of this Memoir. Of this, Sir William, second been assumed without sufficient proof, and the actual filiation of Sir Wilto Mr. Riddell) of a resignation, dated Edinburgh, 28th November 1421, by Williehno, filio suo et heredi ; Willichno de Annandia consanguineo meo, liam has been since ascertained by the discovery (for which I am indebted ohn de Annandia, of the lands of Myles, 'reverendo et superiori domino suo Johanni domino Settoni;' witnesses, 'Archibaldo de Edmistone, milite, et Johanni et Hugoni de Lindesay, armigeris.' Archibald Edmonstone, miles, moreover, and William, are witnesses to a charter (as mentioned before in note 33) by Archibald Douglas, confirming the writs of the lands of Tilliallan in favour of Sir John Edmonstone and David his son, but there is an carlier and curious notice of this Sir Archibald1 in Fordun's History.

It is to the effect that, in 1398, the Queen instituted a great hastitudium (passage of arms) of twelve knights, of which the chief was David, Duke of Rothsay, on the north of Edinburgh, where is now the lake. That in the following year Robert Morley, an English knight, entered Scotland with an honourable company, having obtained permission from the King of Scotland, for the purpose of carrying off a golden cup from the King's table, unless prevented by a Scottish knight, but he was opposed by the Lord James Douglas of Strabnock, and did not accomplish his purpose; that on his return he was met at Berwick, and engaged in single combat on the same day with the two Scottish knights, Archibald Edmonstone and Hugo Wallace, 'ad ictus talliatos,' and that the Englishman got the worst of it.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

other connexion, and more distant than Crauford asserts. Be he who he hence, perhaps, the mistake; but he farther states 'that on the marriage of the degrees prohibited by the canons, a dispensation from the Court of Rome was necessary before they could be lawfully joined in marriage, and which was accordingly procured by the Pope's Legate in Scotland for that as there is clear proof that Sir William was son of Sir Archibald, and not of Sir John, the double royal descent falls to the ground. And if it be true, as I much doubt, that a dispensation was obtained, the consumnity between Sir William and the Countess of Angus must have been from some may, Sir Archibald is the first who can be actually proved of the Duntreath But who was this Sir Archibald? That he was nearly connected with the main stock there seems no reason to doubt, and from the dates it seems likely that he was a younger, probably second, son of the elder Sir John, and consequently brother of him who married the Countess of Douglas. Crauford does not allow for two, father and son, of the same name, and Sir William with the Countess of Angus, being first cousins, and so within effect.' He brings forward, however, no authority for this dispensation, and explicit, allowing them to carry gold, silver, coined or not, papers, etc., to Sir William. In 1428,1 there is a safe conduct for three months, with eight persons in his company, for William Edmonstone, 'caush peregrinationis, going and returning. And in 1431 there is another for Alexander Lord Gordon and William Edmonstone, with twenty-four persons, on a pilgrimage to Canterbury, 'ibidem morando nocte dieque thendinando, and returning. Twenty years after, we find him again engaged in the same object, as there is a passport to Andrew Abbot of Melrose, Andrew Lord Gray, Magist. John Methven, William Edmonstone, and Alex. Napier, Knights, going to Canterbury on a pilgrimage, with a retinue of a hundred persons. The passport is very ast for a year. It would appear, however, that the latter had some ulterior political purpose. According to Abereromby; in 1452, the Abbot of Melrose, with the company mentioned above, 'went as ambassadors, probably to desire some French Ambassadors who, coming to England, line, and was succeeded by his son-

Rymer's Fidra

Fordun's History, Lib. zv. c. 4.

* Alercromby, Martial Achievments, vol. E.

Sir William Edmonstone is styled of Culloden. He had the honour to It has been stated in the preliminary notice, that in a charter of 1445 contract a royal marriage like his kinsman Sir John, in the person of the Lady Mary, second daughter to King Robert the Third, by Annabulla, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Stobhall, ancestor of the Earls of

This lady had been three times previously married. First, in 1397, to George, son of William First Earl of Douglas, by Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus, his third wife. This George inherited the earldom of Angus from his mother, who died in 1402; the same year, however, he was taken prisoner at the battle of Homildon, and died not long afterwards of an epidemic in England. Two sons, William and George, second and fourth Earls of Angus, and Mary, married first to Lord Forbes,

The Lady Mary married secondly, the year following, 1405, Sir James Kennedy, son and heir of Sir Gilbert Kennedy of Dunure, ankestor of the present Marquis of Ailsa. Sir James lost his life in a quarrel with his disinherited elder brother Gilbert, before their father's death, having had three sons, John, Gilbert, and James. The Countess of Angus married, thirdly, Sir William Graham of Kincardine, but the Montrose family are descended from a previous marriage. Five sons were the issue of this marriage, from one of whom the Grahams of Garvock and Balgowan and secondly to Sir David Hay of Yester, were born from this marriage. descended, and from another the Grahams of Claverhouse, the well-known Viscount of Dundee. Sir William Graham died in 1424, and the Countess, who never allowed much time to widowhood, married the following year to her fourth husband, Sir William Edmonstone of Culloden. She must 1 linkerton, History of Sotland, vol. i. p. 221.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

have married very early, as her first husband, the Earl of Angus, was, according to Hume of Godscroft's History of the Douglas, only seventeen at the time. At all events, her fourth marriage was contracted twentyeight years after her first, and though scarcely, as Crauford in pedigree gallantly calls her, 'still a young woman,' she nevertheless had by Sir Willian Edmonstone a son and daughter. The date of her death is unknown, but she was buried within the church of Strathblane.1

have referred in a note; I cannot, however, but remark, that to be of the same stock and kin with the illustrious James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews, son of the Countess of Angus by her second marriage, one of The extensive connexions and numerous descendants of this Princess make her a somewhat important person with genealogists. To these I the best and most distinguished men Scotland ever produced, is an honour of which any family may be justly proud.

of James I. by forfeiture of the Lennox family in 1425, and though there 1434, that the Crown Baillif took no charge of the farms of Duntreath, that time been married nine years to the King's sister. After the death inheritance; and accordingly, in 1445, she granted these lands to William Edmonstone, the younger son of Sir William, on the occasion probably of The acquisition of the lands of Duntreath follows, as has been stated in the preliminary chapter, the alliance. They had come into the hands is no exact notice of the grant, we find in the Chamberlain's Rolls, dated because the King had infeft William Edmonstone with them; who had at of James 1, the Duchess of Albany gained possession of her paternal his marriage with her granddaughter Matilda Stewart.

James 11., seven years later, in 1452, by which Duntreath is erected into a The grant of James 1, however, to the father seems to have been maintained; for both in this grant, and in a charter of confirmation of barony, with full baronial powers, the conjoint infeltment of father and son is specially notified.

On the rolls of the Baillies, both for 1415 and 1446, there are notices of payments of money and meal from the revenues and domains of the Crown in Bute and Arran to William Edmonstone of Culloden, Knight, by the King's order.

Note 34, Appendix

By this Princess, Sir William had a son, William, who succeeded him in 1460, and a daughter, Mary, who married Humphrey Cunningham of Glengarnock, a younger branch of the Glencairn family.

in public matters during the reign of James III. In the Acts of the Scottish Parliaments, Sir William Edmonstone is stated as present in 1464 with sundry others, apparently for the purpose of taking charge of the kingdom, which was much harassed with factions during the King's ninority. In May 1469 he was appointed Justice-General, which, accordng to Spottiswoode's Practicks, he only held till the November of the next year, though Crauford states that he retained the office till the year 1474. In 1471 the following is the list of the Lords of Articles, the standing Committee which used to prepare measures in the Scottish Parliaments :--Bishops of Glasgow and Aberdeen, the Abbot of Holyrood and John Kennedy, 'pro cleris;' the Earls of Huntly and Argyle, the Lords Hamilton and Lyle, and Wm. Edmonstone of Duntreath, 'pro Baronibus.' In 478 he acted again as one of the Commissioners 'pro Baronibus.' This gentleman purchased the lands of Cambus Wallace, near Doun, in the county of Perth, as is attested by a charter of confirmation by King James III., dated Edinburgh, January 30th, 1484. These lands were subse-Sir William succeeded to his father in 1460. He took an active part quently apportioned to a cotet of the family,

It was this Sir William who adopted the tressure and supporters to the cost of arms, as testified by his seal appended to William Graham of Garweck's resignation. He married Mailda, illegitimate daughter of Lord James Swaath, eabs surviving son of Murdoch Duke of Albany. Lord James had seven sons and one daughter, by a lady of, the Macdonald family. Of these, the eldest, created Lord Avoudale, Clantellor of Socioland, and two others, were legitimated; but it does not appear that the same grace was obtained for the other sons and for the daughter.

This marriage is attested by a precept of sasine among the family archives of the hands of Dungoyak, and other portions of Dunttenth, dated May 17, 145c. By Mailda Stewart Sir William left (seconding to

1 In the inventory of Strathmore title-dreds at Clammic Cavite, is 'a notarial instrument by Duntreath, Janet Feoton, diowing tlat in her widowhood. (Air) at Pe

Is the appeared tefore Sir Wm. Edunousfone of y Duniteath, Justice-General, in his Justice Circuit Al. (Air) at Perth, in the year 1470.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

who succeeded him. Second, James, who married, first, Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Aiexander Cunningham of Polmaise, but had no issue. held by the Lords who had put James IV. on the throne, among other Barons nominated for a similar purpose, to take charge of the peace of the was appointed for the districts of Monteith and Strathgartney, 'anent the stanching of thift reif and enormities." The same gentleman obtained a charter of infeftment, under the Great Seal, of Buchyhaderick,* to himself and his wife Helen Murray. Third, also named James, in holy orders, Crauford's genealogy) six sons and one daughter. First, Sir Archibald, Secondly, Helen, daughter to John Murray of Touchadam, which two estates became merged into the latter family by marriage in the next century. In 1488 James Edmonstoune was appointed in the Parliament county of Stirling, at the same time that his elder brother, Sir Archibald, Prior of the Collegiate church of Kirkheugh at St. Andrews. Fourth, John, married a daughter of Sir John Stewart of Ardgowan and Blackhall, Fifth, George, of whom nothing is stated. Sixth, William, deputy-master of the household to King James IV.

Sir William had likewise a daughter married (according to Crauford) to Lawrence, first Lord Oliphant. He died in 1486, and was succeeded by his eldest son.

Just cuts and Archibald, who was served heir to his father by a commission, dated April 20, 1487; and on the 1st of Juse following, is an instrument of sainin in the lands of Duntreath, as also of cornor to the western portion of Stilingshite by a precept of Junes III. to 'Archibald, son and heir of Wilkiam unsquillet William of Duntreath. This gentleman seems during his father's life, to have held some situation about the Court, for in the account book of John Bishop of Chargow, Tressurer to that monarch, published first by Berthwick, and subsequently by Pinkerton, we find, under the pear 1427, the following disbursements:—Hen, given to Archibald of Edmanstowne, 13th of September, to buy a pair of spurs to the King, ss. Item, from Thome of Yare, and editoric to Archibald of Edmonstown, 17 Decembriz, 2 chees and ane half for vallous for a porte mannettle the King, price chouse, 45s, 18m, 55, 18m, 647, 1 ^{*} Ithrk Atti, folio So. c. viii.

* Index to Chatters in Record Office.

Note 35, Appendia.

charter to Archibald Edmonstone de Duntreath,' of the lands of Ardbuth, Lorne, and Dery, but I know nothing more of these possessions.

Sir Archibald married Janet, daughter of Sir James Shaw of Sauchie, in Stirlingshire, as is attested by a charter of the lands of Cambuswallace to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, and Janet Schaw, 'sponsae suae," dated 1490; though this marriage must have occurred several years before. been Comptroller of Scotland to James 111, and probably to his son-in-law's however, that the Laird of Duntreath had no part in the treacherous conduct of his father-in-law towards his unfortunate sovereign. James had appointed Sir James Shaw Governor of Stirling Castle, with a special This charge, according to Lindsay of Pittscottie, Sir James was bribed to surrender to the rebel Lords, and he refused the King admittance into the castle just before the disastrous battle of Sauchie, was a prosperous one, for George Shaw, Abbot of Paisley and Treasurer to lames IV., ' was an opulent prelate,' says Nisbet, ' and took care to provide good matches for his nicces, the daughters of his sister Janet Edmonstone, and, moreover, he procured for his nephew, Robert Shaw, to succeed him in as the dates of the children's marriages prove. This Sir James Shaw had acting under him, the passages above quoted refer. It may be hoped, at the close of which James was assassinated. The connexion, however, the Abbacy of Paisley on his own resignation, and subsequently to the charge over his son. Bishopric of Moray.

and others in the stewartry of Monteith, now extinct. The original branch By this lady Sir Archibald had two sons and seven daughters. First, Sir William, who succeeded to him. Second, James, designated 'frater germanus Willielmi Edmonstone de Duntreath militis, as a witness to a charter of alienation of the lands of Culloden to Alexander Strahan of Scotstown, A.D. 1506.4 From him sprung the cadet branch of Ballinton of Broich probably came from the same stem. He married Agnes, daughter of James Ridhengh of Tillychadell, and was Comptroller of Scotland under James 1V.6

Five of the daughters formed honourable alliances. First, Janet Registers of Privy Seal. Also Charters under * Note 37, Appendix. Note 38, Appendix. the Great Seal. Index to Charters in Record Office.

Note 36, Appendix, * Index to Charters.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

narried William, first Earl of Montrose. Second, Christian1 married John, Lord Ross of Halkhead. Third, Elizabeth? married John, Master of Montgomery, eldest son of Hugh, first Earl of Eglinton. Fourth, Margarets married George Buchanan of that ilk; and fifth, Barbaras married Sir James Muschet of Burnbank, in Perthshire, a family at that time of distinction, but long since extinct. Sixth, Catherine. Seven, Helen, not noticed farther in the pedigree.

Sir Archibald had likewise a natural son named James, styled of Ballown, as there is a charter " Jacobi filii naturalis Archibald Edmonstone de Duntreath," dated 1553.

another charter to the same patties, of Argety and Rednock, dated 1506. anuary 1507, upon a royal precept of Archibald Napier of Monteith, in Edmonstone of Duntreally, as steward of Monteith, is appended. The arms moreover, mentions a decreet, obtained at the instance of Sir James charter in 1497 to William, son and heir of Archibald Edmonstone of George, Abbot of Holyrood, Walter Scott of Buceleuch, and others, he is of Monteith, in consequence of her marriage contract, in which this is neluded with many other appanages as her dower, dated Edinburgh, 6th May, 1503, 15th of James 1V.6 Also to the same for her saisine, 'dominii de Strivelinshire,' William Edmonstone de Duntreath, captain of Doune, is witness among others. There is, moreover, an original infeftment, 20th ands in Monteith, to which officially the scal of arms of William are emblazoned with supporters and erest as now borne. Crauford, He married first, Silvylla, daughter of Sir William Baillie of Lamington, an old and distinguished family now extinct. This marriage is attested by a Sir William's second wife was Elizabeth Leslie, daughter to George, first Earl of Rothes, who had been previously married to William, third Earl · Sir William Edmonstone came into possession on his father's death in 1502. He'was shortly after appointed steward of Monteith, and captain of the Castle of Doune in Perthshire, for, in the following year, 1503, with witness to the saisine of Margaret of England, in the county (or district) Haldane of Glenegles before William Edmonstone, as steward of Monteith. Duntreath, and Sibylla Baillie, his wife, of the lands of Gartbarron; also by Rymer's Folora.

Note 41, Appendix,

å

S-4835

This marriage took place probably about 1507 or 1508, but the lady did not very long survive, as there is an action before the Court of Session in 1911, by William Edmonstone of Duntreath, as executor to 'Umquhile Dame Elizabeth Leslie, Countess of Errol, his spouse. Sir William married thirdly, as appears by a charter, in 1510, to William Edmonstone of Duntreath, knight, and Katherine Forrest, his wife, of the lands of Glenboig and Cambuswallace, but who this lady was I know not, as neither she nor the Countess of Errol are mentioned in Crauford's genealogy. Sir William married fourthly, Sibylla, daughter of Sir John Carmichael of that ilk, as is attested by a charter under the Great Seal, of the same lands of Glenboig and Cambuswallace, to Sir William Edinonstone and Sibylla Carmichael, his wife, on his own resignation. It is dated August 15, 1513, and on the 9th of September he, together with his brothers-in-law, the Earl of Montrose and Lord Ross, fell at the fatal battle of Flodden,

Sir William left five sons and four daughters :- First, Sir William, who succeeded. Second, Archibald, styled brother-german of William of Duntreath in a charter of the lands of Rednock, dated 1553. He had a grant too of Spittal Town in Perthshire. He married Agnes, daughter of Nicol Connall of Bonhard, and had a son William, mentioned in a charter of Easterrowis, 1550. Third, Robert, proprietor of the lands of Cambusbeg in Monteith. Fourth, James, styled brother-german of William of Duntreath in a charter of the lands of Westerrowis, dated 1540. He had also a grant of Buckquhassell, ete, and in 1541 there is a charter to James Edmonstone and Janet Lawson. styled of Duntteath, is probably referred to in a respitt to him and nine his wife, of dimidiatis terrarum Regis de Drumeross. The same James, others from the rout and army of Tantallon, dated January 1530.

Sir William had also a natural son named James, as is certified by a charter of legitimation, also by a geant 'Jacobo filio naturali quondam In the index to the Testamentary Register of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh there is the will of James Edmistone of Newton of Doune, dated November 19, 1589. From him the cadet branch of Newton descended, not long since, I believe, extinct. Willichni de Duntreath mil.

Of the daughters of Sir William, the eldest, Marion, married Sir John Campbell of Glenorchy, by whom she had two daughters:-Marion, wife to Edward Reidheugh of Little Dragar, in Perthshire. Second, Mary narried Robert Hamilton of Inchmachar. Third, Margaret married Stewart of Craigamell. Fourth, Elizabeth married John Logan of Balvic, in Dumof Alexander Hume of Argaty; and Christian, married, according to Douglas, bartonshire.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

from the Duke of Chatelherault, Earl of Arran, the Governor, under the Great Seal, of the date of September 1547, 'for art and part,' as the sued, in which much blood was shed, and many stain on both sides. The Stewarts' party were worsted, and he himself slain on the spot. This of Duntreath, found means three years thereafter to procure a remission record bears, 'of the slaughter of umquhile Sir James Stewart of Beath, committed by him, his two brothers, and their friends, in the town.of and act made by King James the Fourth at the beginning of the war. In father, as joint keepers of Doune Castle, and stewards of Monteith and Strathgardney. In 1528, however, this charge was taken from the brothers and given to Sir James Stewart of Beath (ancestor to the present line of the Earls of Moray), brother to the Lords Ochiltree and Methven, husband to the Queen Downger. This grant was renewed to Sir James Stewart during the minority of Queen Mary, which brought the long-suppressed feud to a point. 'The resentment of the Edinonstones of the House of Duntreath,' says Crauford, 'that seemed before to be concealed, broke out now into an open flame. Some injuries being likewise done, or alleged to be done, by Sir James Stewart to Dunireath and his friends by the Stewarts' deputes, all these resentments working together, the Laird of Duntreath himself, Archibald, and James (of Newton), his brothers, their friends and retainers, happened to encounter Sir James Stewart in (or near A. E.)* the High Street of the town of Dunblane, upon which a sharp and brisk scuffle enaccident fell out on Whitsunday 1543, for which this gentleman, the Laird The first notice of Sir William Edmonstone, as heir to his father, is in an instrument of saisine of the barony of Duntreath 'to William, heir to his father William of Duntreath, who is stated to have died 'ad fidem William is declared, moreover, to be of lawful age, in terms of a dispensation he same year he and his brother Archibald were appointed to succeed their Regis in campo bellico nuper in Northumbria,' dated May 2, 1516.

At a place called Murdech's Ford, between Doune and Dunblane. Note 45, Appendir.

Dunblane¹ on Whitsunday, three years before, in the Registers of the Privy Seal in the publick Records in Edinburgh, ad annum 1547.¹ The charge of the Castle O Donne was in 150 granded to the Earl of Montrose, as wilnessed by the document among the Duntreath papers. It is dated Orleans, December 35th, 1560; but as the signature Marie is, Declive, no in the Queen's hand, it is probably a copy.

Of the other notices of StriVillian, he is mentioned as absent from an assiste held on the murder of Sterling of Glorat in 153s. His connexion with the Earl of Lennox's family led him, on the occasion of the marriage of Lord Dandput (its wife's grannfapthen's with Queen Mayn in 1565, to be appointed one of the Lords of the Prity Council, at which time he was probably knighted, as his predecessors had been. In the Book of the Universal Misk. William Edmonstone of Duntreath signed as one of the Commissioners to the General Assembly in 165s.

Sir William married first, the Lady Agnes Stewart, youngest daughter to Matthew, second Earl of Lennox of the Stewart line, who was killed at the battle of Flodden, by Elizabeth, daughter of James, Lord Hamilton, and the Lady Mary, daughter of King James the Second. This marriage is attested by a charter of the date 1522, and there was by it a son, Archibald, who predeceased his father. This is certified by charters of the lands of Balquharran, in Dumbartonshire, to Archibald,* son and apparent heir to William of Duntreath. But there is reason to think he was of an unsound state of mind, for in 1565 there is a deed of resignation by Archibald, son and heir of William of Duntreath, of the same lands of Balquharran in favour of William, his father, in liferent, and James, his brother, in fee, and in another it is stated, with consent of his father, his Governor and Administrator'in respectu inhabilitatis." Moreover, there is an entail of the barony of Duntreath executed by Sir William two years later, in 1568, in favour, first of Jaines Ldmonstone, his second son, and his heirs; next to Archibald of Spittaltown, James of Ballinton, and James of Newton, and their heirs-

PRegister of the Privy Seal.

 Plott de, Apprenda.
 This de, Apprenda.
 This bit Streetle on the Plotter of Signature from 1964 to 1953 control of the Apprendix of the Plotter of the Apprendix of the Apprendix male successively; falling whom, to the heirs-female of the said James, second son of Sir William, on his, Sir William's, resignation, reserving to himself the liferent, with a suitable maintenance to Archibald, eldest son of the said william. There is likewise, in 1559, a charter of legitimation to William, "Bastardi filli naturalis Archibald Edonostone."

The second second

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

I may mention here a curious memorandum written in an old hand, 'Artelibald Edulation of Dunterly, highly, married Annabla, daughter to King James the Fourth, who married Majgaret, daughter to Hemy the Seventh, King of England. To this my grandfather has added, 'This I found along with the manuscript of the family (Craloud's) but I do not see it there wonder as authentic. Now there is no notice in the manuscript at all of the abovementioned Archibald, to whom alone this reference could apply, nor is there an account of any daughter of James the Fourth of the name Annabella, legitimate or otherwise. The most, thu, that can be said is that it is within the range of possibility, that this Archibald may have been knighted and have married a daughter of the King, but standing as it does without upoof of any kind, this monorandum must be considered as not earrying with it any degree of weight.

Sir William married, secondly, Margaret, daughter to Sir James Campbell of Lawers, direct ancestor of the Earls of Loudon, This marriage is verified by a charter of the lands of Cambusvallace as dower, dated 1545. By this hald—and 1454. By this hady the had—

Sir James, who succeeded him, and six daughters, all respectably allied,
First, Marjooy married, first, Sir John Maxwell of Pollok, and secondly, Mange or Kentigeror Graham of Orchilt, full case of James, second Earl of Montroes.* Second, Shills married John Stewart of Barseule, in the county of Renfrew, a branch of the Stewarts of Lennox. Third, Annabella married John Stilling or Globard, in Stillingshire, ancestor of the present family. Pourth, Marion married Doud Scening of Nobleston, in Dumbartonshire. Fifth, Elizabeth married John Sterling of Ballagan, brother to Sterling of Gloter, and shark, janet married Luke or Lawrence Sterling of Baird, brother to the Laid of Keir.

1 William Edmonston of Duntreath was noneign those who signed a declaration against Toyery, and in favour of the young King James the Sixth, at the General Assembly, July 1567.

-Calderwood's Hintory, vol. ii. p. 383.

Note 47, Appendix.

Sir William died at an advanced age. His will is stated in the Testamentary Register of the Commissary Court to be dated March 1st, 1580. He was succeeded by his sole surviving son, Sir James.

This gentleman obtained from Colin, Earl of Argyle, Justice-General of Scotland, the grant of a deputation1 for holding justiciary courts at the sortalice of Duntreath, upon the criminals therein named; this is dated 1578, and in 1584 he obtained a grant of the 'escheat of Mungo Edmonstone, fallen through his treasonable assistance at the late surprizal of the Castle of Sterling.' Mungo Edmonstone was the brother of James of Newton, and the treason referred to was the seizure of the Castle of Sterling by the Earls of Angus and Marr on the 18th of April, which was however recovered by the King on the 27th of the same month; and the execution of Archibald Douglas, whom the two Earls left in charge of the Castle with several of the garrison. The Earl of Gowrie too, who, ever since the ciously, was apprehended on this occasion at Dundee, and his petition being rejected, he was brought to trial, 'Mr. James Graham sitting as Justice, and assisted by Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar, Alexander, Master of Livingston, Alexander Bruce of Airth, and James Edmonstone of part he had taken in the late 'Raid of Ruthven,' was looked upon suspi-Duntreath.' The indictment was found relevant, and the Earl was thence sent to his peers for trial, found guilty, and executed,

In the same year occurred another transaction, In which Sir James was himself implicated. The facts, as related by Archbishop Spottiswoode and Calderwood, are as follows2:... A strong party had been formed by some of the chief nobility, against the influence of the young Duke of Lennox, and still more against that worthless favourite James Stewart, whom the King had lately created Earl of Arran. On the Earl of Gowrie's apprehension, the Earls of Angus and Marr, with others, fled to England, and in order 'to breed a terror,' says Spottiswoode, 'in the people,' and cause them abstain from communicating in any sort with the exiled Lords, a proclamation was made 'that whosoever should discover any person offending in that kind should, besides his own pardon, receive a special reward.' Hereupon did one Robert Hamilton of Eglismachen, delate Malcolm Douglas

Selland, Ind p. 336, and Calderwood, History of the Kirk of Scotland, vol. iv. p. 345, etc. Spotling code, Hittery of the Church of Note 48, Appendix discredit, he was menaced to yield unto. Sir James's deposition is given at length by Caldenvood. He declares that he is led to make confession of a threefold conspiracy of the exiled Lords against the King, of which he has been informed by Black John Hume of the Law, who came twice to him, each time with a letter of credit of the Earl of Marr, the knowledge of which now preyed on his conscience. The first plot was, that a force of a thousand or twelve hundred men was to have been raised, with which the King was to have been surrounded at Holyrood House and retained prisoner. The second was, that owing to the difficulty of procuring so large a number, thirty or forty able men were to have been hired 'to await upon His Majesty in the fields, when his horse was souped (wearied), and to carry him off, either to the house of Douglas, or to Cumleye, or to an island in Lochlomond. The third plot was, that since so many men could not be collected as even thirty or forty, without being suspected, every one of the principal conspirators, the Albot of Aberbrotlick, the Earls of Angus and Marr, and the Master of Glammis, should each select two or three of their own men, who should scenelly repair to wherever the King was residing, and disguised themselves, and with their horses tails, manes, and cars cut off, should pass over and kill the King, by shot or other of Mains, and John Cunningham of Drumwhassill, for having conspired to Lords might come and receive him. A mere forgery, yet gladly hearkened of good respect, and mistrusted of the Court; Mains especially, because of his valour and manhood. To make out the accusation, it was devised that Sir James Edmonstone of Duntreath, who had lived in great familiarity with them, should be charged with the same crime, and, upon his confession, to be pardoned, which, by the policy of the accuser, to his own perpetual weapon.' A vidiculous tale, as Ilume1 of Godscroft justly calls it, but intercept the King in hunting, and detain him in some stronghold till the unto by those that desired to be rid of them, for they were both gentlemen nevertheless, full in accordance with the spirit of the times.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

'Matters thus dressed,' centinues Spottiswoode, 'Colonel William' Stewart was sent to apprehend Mains and Drunnwhassill, who, finding them n their own houses, did, without resistance, bring them prhoners to Edinburgh. The 9th of Pebruary they were presented before the Justice, Hume of Codsciofl, Hillory of the Dow, lases, folio, p. 391.

John Home, commonly called Black John, he, without making any defence Mr. John Graham sitting as deputy, and Mr. Edward Brease as assessor, Beginning made with Duntreath, he was indicted for conspiracy with Mains and Drumwhassill (the accuser Hamilton) and others, for taking and detaining the King in the manner aforesaid, which was said to be plotted by the Earl of Angus, and imparted to him and the rest on pannel, by confessed all, betaking him to the King's mercy. Drumwhassill, accused of the same conspiracy, and of consulting with Duntreath thereupon, in the churches of Stratliblane and Killearn, was further charged with the treasonable attempt of Ruthven whereof he had been partaker. What he answered I find not in the process, but, when Main's indictment was read, he denied all, and so cleared himself by the unlikelihood and their impossibility to compass a business of that importance, to all that were present as in their hearts they did pronounce him innocent. Notwithstanding, they all three in the public street of Edinburgh. The gentlemen's case was much pitied, Main's case especially. Hamilton, who made the delation, lived after this of Arran until the alteration of the Court at Sterling, at which time James were convicted, and declared guilty of treason. Doom was only pronounced upon Drumwhassill and Mains, and they the same day hanged in continual fear, and abhorred of all men; he kept still in the company Johnston of Westraw, pretending a vow he had made to avenge Main's death, did kill him as he was flying through the park, on the south side of the town,' of procuring hatred against the banished! Lords and Ministers.' He carried with him a copy of the book entituled 'The King's declaration of The object of the Court, however, was by no means gained by the death of these inferior personages. Sir Lewis Bellenden, Justice-Clerk, was sent on a special embassy to England in February 1585, with the intention the late Acts of Parliament, which was reprinted in London with some alterations and additions. On Thursday, the 11th of March, Hume, a servant of the Earl of Marr, and Kerr, a servant of the Master of Glammis, went to London 'to purge themselves of the crimes laid to their charge by the Justice-Clerk.' A month afterwards the Lords themselves were confronted with the Justice-Clerk before the Chancellor, the Treasurer, and Caldernood's Millory, vol. iv. p. 352, etc.

sent the accused parties a message by Sir Philip Sidney, assuring them

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

him, we trust so much to his own honesty, that if he were here present he with them, engaging their lives and honours, 'that if he were brought forward they would appear innocent to all men.' The Lords hold the same add, as concerning the Laird of Duntreath, deponer, 'although his testithe Queen that they might be warded (imprisoned). They desired Her at Westminster.' Calderwood then gives the answer to the Justice-Clerk's and the respondent thus goes on :- As to the Laird of Duntreath, surely I know him not well, but this we know him to profess himself plainly the Duke of Lennox's man, who brought a commission from the Duke of Lennox to the King's Majesty, that time the Duke was removed from His received good deed of him, was in good favour and credit with him, was made knight when he was made Duke, as we understand; is in blood joined to the Earl of Montrose, whose uncle has married his sister, and is detained in the hands of our enemies; whereof, if either by violence this be drawn out of him, for fear of his life, either by persuasion he be induced to speak thus, or if he have spoken it at all, or if any other passion hath overtaken would never say that we devized any such purpose. And if he were induced thereunto, what the testimony of one man could prove your Honours know.' They again press that the Laird of Duntreath may be confronted language in an application to the King likewise, given by Calderwood, and mony against us be many way's suspicious, yet we trust so much in his honesty and in our own innocency, that if he were not in the hands of our special enemies, whether either threatening, prayer, or some other infirmity The Justice-Clerk returned to Edinburgh on the 10th of May, and the Queen 'They cleared themselves worthily,' says Calderwood, 'the Master of Glammis taking the speech in hand. The Justice-Clerk craved Majesty's declaration touching their innocency. It is deferred. They lie occusation at length. Each of the charges is of course denied, and they cfused to answer to the question whether they sent any letters to the Laird of Duntreath, 'least by purging of ourselves we appear to accuse others.' They did not acknowledge any acquaintance with Hamilton the accuser, Highness; with great vehemency delivered the same, held his lands of him, transporting him, maketh him as appeareth to forget himself, or if he were confronted with us, he would be ashamed to confess so manifest ah untruth." Lord Hunsdon,

ş

of her good affection,' and he 'willed them to advise upon their petitions which they would have presented to Her Majesty, who was to be at Westminster the week following, and one of their number is appointed to confer with Secretary Walsingham. The return of the Lords to Scotland, and the downfall of Arran, are well-known matters of history.

As a sequel to this miserable affair, Calderwood relates that 'Wotten, the English Ambassador, informed his Mistress that there was nothing but double-dealing and deceit in our Court, and therefore desired to be recalled home. That Duntreath, being now set at liberty, had written to the King and him, that he was not only suborned, but threatened by Arran to depone that which he had deponed against the Lords," despicable in the extreme. A few years afterwards, moreover, it is thus crimes committed by them 17th and 18th December last against His Crauford, in the true spirit of his eraft, tries to soften off this transaction, but it must be confussed that Sir James's conduct was base and given by Piteairn:3-" Robert Hamilton of Inchmachan, William Kirkaldy of Grange, Sir James Edmonstone of Duntreath, . . . Edmonstone younger of Duntreath, and James Lockhart of Lees, accused of certain treasonable Majesty and Counsellors, for being present at certain speeches uttered by Mr. Walter Baleanquall (the well-known religious agitator) in the pulpit in the New Kirk, as means used by him to stir up sedition. It is defended that first Balcanquall, the author of the alledged conspiracy, is not calledalso that such convocation is no crime, being allowed by Act of Secret Counsell made in 1599, where all Lords, etc., are summoned wherever they deem expedient to give account of their faith, and subscription, and band, made by the King for maintaining true religion.' Answered that Balcanquall had no lawful power to assemble a meeting-Referred to a Jury. The Jury challenged by the accused. No further decision stated.

forgery; and the next year there is a notice in the criminal trials! of Having again escaped, we find Sir James still in performance of public duties. In 1600 he was Chancellor of an Assize on James Tarbet for William Cunningham of Tourlands, being condemned to be beheaded for holding his house of Cunninghamhead against the Lairds of Duntreath Pitcairn, Criminal Trible, Feb. 11, 1596-7. Caldera cod, vol. iv. p. 38a. Note 49, Appendix.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

and Urchill (Graham of Orchill), His Majesty's Commissioners, who were assieging the same place for thirteen days, and discharging hackbuts. In 1610 he was a member of the General Assembly as one of the barons: and n 1614 Sir Janes sat on the jury at the trial! of John Ogilvie, a Jesuit, who was hanged. The last additions probably, at Duntreath House, were made by him, as is shown by his coat of arms still existing. It seems likely, however, that the south side of the quadrangle was left imperfect, rom the resolution Sir James took towards the latter part of his life with his eldest son, to transplant the family to the north of Ireland.

the constant allotments made to younger branches had doubtless led to among the motives which led to a step so injurious to the family. Almost reland, the great proportion of which had been forfeited by the rebellion. n which the Earls of Tyrone and Tyrconnell, and the great northern chief Various circumstances had occurred to lower the family of Duntreath from the position it had hitherto held. The reduction of the property by considerable embarrassment, and being no longer supported by Court favour or uplield by powerful alliances as heretofore, such were probably immediately upon his accession to the Crown of England, James commenced his well-organized system of peopling the north-west of D'Dogharty, had taken so great part, and which was now perfectly laid waste, by colonists from England and Scotland.

Among the earliest settlers had been John Dalway, who came to freland holding a commission in Lord Essex's army in 1573. By marrying a daughter of a relation of O'Neil, he obtained from the Crown a grant of a considerable district of land in the county of Antrim, which his fatherin-law forfeited. Of this, Broadisland formed a portion, which portion in to attend for forty days yearly the general hostings of the Lord Deputy; and within five years to build a baze, namely a featified 'mansion of lime and stone, covered with slate, which shall cost in building £300.' Probably. 1600 he leased for ever to William, cluest son of Sir James Edmonstone, on the usual conditions of finding five able horsemen, properly equipped, a account of his advanced age, this purchase was made entirely in his son's on the west side of the qualrangle, when pulled down and reduilt in 1863. 1 The Oplier S.J 1 K., Sir James Edmon-Hone, knight, was found on a stone in the lower name, nor does it appear that Sir James himself ever went to Ireland; indeed, it is likely the arrangement was left mainly to his heir-apparent William, but in 1614, in order to meet this purchase, and perhaps on account of other debts besides, Sir James mortgaged the whole of the Duntrenth estate to his soci-law, Sir William Graham of Braco, redeemable on the payment of 8,0000 meets, in the course of the same year, however, the mottgage was made over to Sir William Livingston of Kilsyth, but not quite on the same terms, as some portions, for which of this mortgage was paid off, and the Duntreath estate recovered sixteen years after, in 1630, by Archibald, grandson of Sir James.

1 Note 51, Appendix.

Sir James Humontone of Doutscath married first, Helen, daughter Sir James Stilmontone of Doutscath married first, Helen, daughter of Sir James Stilling of Keit, by Jean, daughter of William Chisholm, Bishop of Dumbhan. The celebrated John Napier of Meetistson, inventor of the Legarithms, married another daughter of Keirs. By this lady he

First, William, his eldest son and heir. Second, May married, first, John Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, in Ayrshire, by whom she had several children; and seconday, the Honourable Sir William Graham of Brace, second son of John, third Earl of Moritose, and had issue. Third, Marjooy married Claude Hamilton of Cocknay, in the county of Dumbarton, and had issue. Fourth, Helen married John Lennox of Brancols', in Lennox, and had issue.

Sir James married scoundly, in 1285, Margaret, daughter to Sir John Colymbour of Luss, by Agrees, daughter of Robert Lord Boyd, by whom he had one son, Robert, who died unmarried, and four daughters. Bribatch, married to James Edmonstone of Breich. Margaret, Agnes, and Jean, unmarried.

Sir James died at an advanced age, in or about 1618, and was succeeded by his clotes, ow William. This gentleman, during his fathers' lifetime, had been appointed one of the Justices or Commissionersy with many others of the nobility and gentry, for effectually superessing Jesuits and sensimenty Priestly, yan Art of the General Assembly, Acted March 641, 8189. He subsequently settled in Irefand, and built the louse of Nechlal.

Note 52, Appendi

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

heiress of James Edmonstone of Broich, by whom he got the lands of near the Pentland hills, in 1666, by the King's forces, under the well-known Dalzell. For this treason he was forfeited, but escaping to Ireland, he married Mrs. Dalway. Second, Jean married Sir Robert Adair of Kilhill, It is stated that the first Scottish Presbyterian Minister introduced into Ireland was invited by him, and located in his parish of Broadisland, in 1611. He married Isobel, daughter of John Haldane of Glencagles, in the county of Perth, by Isobel, daughter of Sir James Hume of Wedderburn. n Berwickshire. By her he had five sons and two daughters. First, Archibald, who succeeded him. Second, James married his cousin-german ean, daughter of John Cunningham of Cunninghamhead, and had issue. Third, John married likewise his cousin-german Elizabeth, daughter and Ballybantry, in Ireland, and had several children. Fourth, Robert, and fifth, Andrew, both unmarried. Of the two daughters, first, Helen married first, John Dolway (called Dolloway in the pedigree, but incorrectly) of Bellichill in the county of Antrim, and had issue; and secondly, Colonel ames Wallace of Auchans and Dundonald. This gentleman had headed the insurrection of the Presbyterians which was defeated at Rulliongreen, in the county of Wigton, by whom she had several children.

and was succeeded by his eldest son, Archibald. The first act we hear of a considerable portion of the estate, which he happily effected in 1630, by selling doubtless a part of the property acquired by his grandfather and father in Ireland; and for the next century Duntreath continued to be, conjointly with Redhall, the abode of the head of the family. The laird of Duntreath being a zealous Presbyterian, was elected 'Commissioner for the Barons,' and member for the county of Stirling to the Parliament held by Charles 1, on the occasion of his coronation in June 1633. 'This Parliament,' says Laing, a strongly prejudiced writer, 'sat as usual only two days. The first was appropriated to the election of the Lords of articles; William Edmonstone of Duntreath died in or about the year 1629, this gentleman was to redeem the old family residence of Duntreath, and the last was reserved for confirming the articles prepared by that committee, whose deliberations occupied the intermediate period.' This was usual, but Laing continues to relate, not only that the Parliament was packed by the King's orders, but moreover repeats a story, current it seems at the time, unquestionably laid the foundation of the unhappy Charles's ruin. It is that the Lord Register reported falsely the decision, and the King tion,' declares to be a 'calumny so foul and black as they themselves did know it to be false.' This was in reference to an act of certification of the acts concerning religion; one of those unfortunate measures which said the Laird of Duntreath took an active part, though the King took prevented any scrutiny to be made. This the King, in his 'Large Declaradown the names and votes, declaring 'I shall know to-day who will do me

Archibald, and two daughters. First, Helen married to Thomas Niven of Halcraig, in Lanarkshire, by whom he had two sons, William* and Mr. Edmonstone married Jean, daughter of Archibald Hamilton of Monkridden, in the county of Ayr; and second, Jean unmarried. Of the him from the succession, and there is consequently an 'Inquisitio de tutels,' when he wrote :--' He was an exceedingly sightly handsome gentleman as sons. William, the eldest, was born deaf and dumb. This legally precluded dated September 15th, 1647. Craufurd, in the MS. genealogy, gives the following account of this gentleman, I suppose from tradition still preserved could be seen. (This is fully borne out by a portrait of him in the family collection.) He had a great vivacity and quickness of imagination, and a wonderful and amazing apprehension of things; and so great and so strong a memory, that it was remarked that he seldom or ever forgot any person he had once ever seen. He did not seem to be in any degree touched with any dull or melancholy reflections on his own misfortune, for he was as much as is possible to conceive, not only a cheerful, but a facetious man, as I have been told by some gentlemen of credit and reputation who were his intimate acquaintance, for with those, as he had frequent and intimate habits, both he and they got into as familiar a way of conversing by signs hearing. He had an handsome allowance in annuity of the estate, that of the honourable family he was the representative of, and he kept and and motions as if he had enjoyed the ordinary faculties of speech and supported him to live in a way suitable and becoming the rank and quality used the title all his life long, for he lived to a good age, and died some time after the revolution several years."

Lang, Hittery of Scotland, vol. iii. p. 102.

THE FAMILY OF EDITONSTONE.

had the credit of being gifted with second sight, for in Law's 'Memorials's the Dumb Laird of Duntreath at Paisley make signs of some great troubles and fightings to be in this land in a few months.' In the same curlous work is the following notice of him :- The Laird of Duntreath, born deaf and dumb, a man devotedly set, on a tyme two of his neighbours falling out at two miles' distance from him, when he was at present at Duntreath, the one striking the other with a whenger in the arm, he at the same instant of time made a sign of it. So at Paisley, he being there in the year 1676, in December, in the time of the frost, there was one of his acquaintance went forth to a water at a good distance from him upon the ice, and had The apartment he occupied in the House of Duntreath still goes by he name of the Dumb Laird's Tower.1 It would seem, moreover, that he it is stated, after an enumeration of signs, 'Sic lyke,' in February 1677, 'did

Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath seems to have died in the year 1637 during the minority of his son's, for there is an 'Inquesitio de tutela' dated October of that year, by which James Edmonstone of Broadisland in Ireland, next brother of Archibald, is instituted guardian (or tutor, as it is called) of William and Archibald, the two legitimate sons of the aforesaid Archibald. And in 1644, probably on account of the death of James, their next uncle John Edmonstone of Broich is appointed to the same office. Moreover, in 1649 John, tutor of Duntreath, was nominated one of the Commissioners or Committee for War appointment by Parliament for Stirlingshire, he having been sent as member for that county to the Parliafallen in, and he at the same time gave warning of it by a sign.'s ment of that year,

The infirmity of William Edmonstone precluding him according to the old law from the succession, Archibald, second son of his father, was re-

Presbyterian cause. But he lived at a time when this cause was no longer in the ascendant, and thence came into trouble. Fanaticism and violence-This gentleman, like his predecessors, was a zealous supporter of the on the one side, and oppressive tyranny on the other, brought Scotland into great misery during the reigns of the two last Stuarts. The case, as urned heir.

4 This tower was putted down, and restored in 1563. * Law's Memorials, p. 11$.

20.35

advised Duntreath what to say before the Council, who put some questions to him relating to the King's lawful title to the Crown, and the Archbishop of St. Andrews' murder. His answers were pretty general, and he desired to be excused on that subject, seeing he did not think himself obliged to declare in his private capacity. Then they asked him about the lecture in Duntreath House for which he was apprehended-how he came to be present at it. His answer was that the meeting was without his knowledge or invitation. In short they could lay so little to his charge that they could not be so crucl as to take his life, but fined him five hundred pounds sterinvitation of some private Christians, which, when Duntreath heard of, he esteemed so by the prevailing party of the time, he was informed against by one Craig of Ledrogrean to my Lord Ross who then commanded a reath, not suspecting any such treatment, and apprehending him, took him straight to Glasgow, where he lay a night in the court of guard, afterwards inued six months in the Tolbooth, in which time he was called three times before the Council, but was not allowed any advocate or lawyer to appear or plead for him. Only Sir George Lockhart came into the Tolbooth and 'That in the year 1677, the late Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath being at Duntreath on his private affairs, the Minister called Mr. Forrester, formerly in the parish of Killearn, came to Duntreath without Duntreath's knowledge, and had a private lecture in the Gallery there, probably by the hought it no great crime to be a hearer. On this egregious fault, only troop of dragoons. On this the said troop was sent to apprehend Dunthree nights in the Tolbooth, and gave in his bond of £1000 stg. to General Dalziel to appear at Edinburgh a month after that; which he did, and con-

It appears from the indictment that Mr. Edmonstone came under the ing, the one half to the informer, the other half to the Crown."

1 The following r 4e is appended to the trial of John Ogilvie, the Jesuit, A.D. 1615, in Amot's State Trible, p. 334:-

" It is somewhat remarkable that the son or grandion of Edmonstone of Duniteath, one of was fined by the Privy Council in 9000 merks, the jurymen who convicted the prisoner (Ogilvie) for refusing to answer upon outh whether he who was under sentence of banishment, etc., June 30, 16S1, Fountainhall's Dicisions, p. 145. Now, refusing to answer upon oath was the had harboured one Forrester, a field-preacher, only crime which was proved against the prisoner " Ogilvie," for which he suffered death."

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

to strong and unusual measures at this wretched period. Mr. Edmonstone and the Lords of the Council. The fine, however, was exacted and paid, and in the Acts of Parliament dated Jan. 27, 1699, is 'An Act and decreet in favour of Robert Adair of Kinhilt against the Aires (heirs) of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, in consequence Sir Robert having borrowed £500 to pay his stepfather's fine.' It is stated that the Laird of Duntreath being of weak and infirm body, at the earnest solicitation of his wife (Sir Robert Adair's mother), he borrowed £500 on Irish security at 10 percent. from Mr. William Hamilton, Duntreath's uncle, and Sir Robert now claimed repayment from the tutors of the present Laird during his minority, which newly revived law against 'intercommuning with rebels,' and also under that against Conventicles. The fanatical and often treasonable conduct of the extreme section of the Presbyterians would have justified a less unscrupulous and tyrannical government than that of Lauderdale in resorting was released on 'a petition by the Lady Duntreath' to the Duke of York Edmonstone with part of Adair's regiment was sent to secure the pass-As regarding the circumstances attending Mr. Edmonstone's death, we have the following statement partly taken from the same document. There is further to be added of the same gentleman, that he was not long at rest from the troubles above mentioned. The Rebellion broke out in reland in the year 1688. Duntreath appeared very early to show his real for the Protestant interests, and liberties of the people. He first raised an independant company of his tenants and neighbours, and as far as was in his power defended the country from the insults of the Irish, particularly those that were in the garrison of Carrickfergus. He was afterwards commanded by General Gustavus Hamilton to march his company towards Coleraine.' Here he was brought into action with the Rebels. Sir Arthur Rawdon, in his retreat before the Irish army, had prolen down the bridge across the Bannwater at Port Glenone in the march previous. On the advance of Lord Galway's division, Colonel and prevent the repairing of the bridge; but on the 7th April Colonel Nugent having succeeded with a strong force in crossing the Bann near Port Glenone suddenly attacked Colonel Edmonstone, who, being supvorted by his Lieutenant, Colonel Shaw, and Sir Arthur Rawdon, defended was allowed.

Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath married Anna Helena, daughter of Colonel Walter Scott * of Harwood, and widow of Sir William Adair of Kinlilt, by whom he had four sons: first, Archibald; second, Walter; third, William; all of whom died young,-fourth, Archibald, who succeeded him,-and five daughters; first, Elizabeth, married James Montgomery 3 of Rosemount, by whom she had two sons, William and Hugh, and three daughters,-Anna Helena; Elizabeth; and Martha; Second, Jean; third, Margaret; fourth, Isobel; all died young; fifth, Anna Helena, married her own near connexion, Alexander Dalway of Bellichill in the County of Antrim, sometime member for the borough of Carrickfergus, by whom she had two sons, Robert and Archibald. which was accordingly done.'1

Archibald Edmonstone succeeded to his father, at whose death in 1689 he was a minor, probably about seven years old, for there is a settlement of accounts with his mother, who acted as guardian, dated 1703, and in 1704 we find his name among the list of Commissioners of Supply for the County of Stirling. He sat in the Irish Parliament 4 for the borough of Carrickfergus through the whole of the reign of George 1, from 1715 to 1727. He also made considerable additions to the family property, both in Ireland and Dumbartonshire, daughter of Henry, third Lord Cardross, by Catherine, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Kirkhill, whose eldest son David succeeded to the This gentleman married first the Honourable Anne Erskine, third

"Archibald Edmonstone," 1705. He was a realous member of the Bullast Presbytery; Roid, Hot. Probytensa Church in Irdand, Among the petitioners against the Test Clauses to the Irish Parhament was the name of Note 56, App. 1 Note 55, Appendix. Note 57, App.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

Kennedy of Cultra in the County of Down, Esq. by whom she had one Earldom of Buchan, from whom the present family is descended. By this marriage Mr. Edmonstone had one daughter, Catherine, married to Arthur daughter, married Richard Church, Esq., and died without issue.

of the Honourable John Campbell of Mamore, second son to Archibald. Mr. Edmonstone married secondly, in 1716, Anne, second daughter ninth Earl of Argyle, by whom he had three sons and two daughters,1 died unmarried; and Alexander, married Catherine, youngest daughter Second, Campbell, sometime I. Governor of Dumbarton Castle, married Marianne, daughter of William Anderson, Esq. of Glasgow, by whom he had four sons and eight daughters. The sons were Archibald, William, James, and Charles, all of whom died unmarried. The daughters were:-(1.) Anne, married, in 1775, D. Halliday of Belfast, and died Marrianne; all died unmarried; (7.) Elizabeth Hamilton, married in 1783 Andrew Millar, Esq. of Dalnair in the County of Stirling, by whom she had three sons and two daughters :- Andrew and Campbell, who both of Sir James Colquhoun of Luss, Baronet, and died without issue. The daughters were Marianne; and Robina, married Hugh Williams, Esq., (3.) without issue; (2.) Jessie; (3.) Susan; (4.) Dalmeny; (5.) Robina; (6.) First, Archibald, first Baronet, who succeeded him. Jean Campbell, died unmarried.

Third, Charles, the third son, a major in the army, married a daughter and has issue five daughters; first, Frances, married to Of the two daughters of Mr. Edmonstone: First, Anna Helena Scott, married Philip Fletcher, Esq., by whom she had one son Philip, died un-Hodgkinson, by whom she had one son Francis, late Professor of Civil Law at Dublin University, manried Maria, daughter of Dr. Thomas Johnson, M.D., by whom he had two sons; first, Edmonstone; second, Frances, married to Bradshaw, Esq., and died without issue. married; second, Mary, married the Reverend lanes Lendrick, Esq.; second, Harriet, married to Abel Labertouche, Esq.; third, Julia, married to Reverend Charles Basden; fourth, Mary; Russell, Esq. fifth, Louisa, married

Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath died in 1768, and was succeeded by his eldest son Archibald, born at Silverbanks, since called (I believe) Archaronicin, in the Cominy of Dumbarton, October 10th, 1717. He was created a Bronnet of the United Kingdom, May 34, 1774. Through a very long life Sir Archibald was a great benefactor to his family as an improver of the property, but his principal acquisition was the purchase of the Kilshyt estate consequent to the safe of Red Hall and the remains of the Broadishad property in Techno.

Sir Archibald sat for the county of Dumbarton in the Parliaments which were elected in 1961, 1963, and 1774. In 1780, he was chosen for the Ayr and Archibe beologist, a gain in 174 and 1790 he was chosen once more for Dumbartonality, which he represented till he retired from Parliament in 1769.

In politics he was a Tory, and supported Lord North's administration during the American war,

He married first, in October 1753, Susanna Mary, daughter of Roger Harene,1 Esq., a French gentleman, by Susanna daughter of Daniel Hays, Esq. of Wimbeldon, by whom he had five sons and three daughters: first, Archibald, born in 1754. Ilaving obtained a military education on the continent, he entered into the army, and as a Lieutenant in the First Regiment of Footguards served as Aide-de-camp to General Riedesel who commanded the German division of the army under General Burgoyne in the unfortunate campaign in America, which ended by the surrender at Satatoga in 1777. Captain Edmonstone's health suffered from the hardships he underwent, and on his return to England he fell into a rapid consumption, and died at Clifton in 1780, in the 26th year of his age, Second, William Archibald. He went to India, where he entered into the Civil Department, and died at Calcutta in 1803. Third, Charles, second Baronet. Fourth, George, born in 1764, in holy orders, late Vicar of Pollerne, in the county of Wilts. Fifth, Neil Benjamin, bon in 1765. At an early age Mr. Edmonstone went to India, where he greatly distinguished himself by his superior talents and high moral qualities, and eventually rose to the highest situations in the Civil Service, short only of the supreme. He was successively Persian Translator, Secretary to the Government, and member and vice-President of the Supreme Council, and on his return to England was elected a member of the Direction, which he

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

Jaugliters :- first, William Archibald, born 1804, died in India, 1827; Douglas, and has issue, Susan Carnegie, born 1844, and other daughters; ourth, George Frederick, born 1813, married Ann Farly, second daughter Turner, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, and has issue; fifth, James Harene, born 1820, died 1834; sixth, Charlotte Anne, married James Carnegie, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, who died 1831, and thereafter narried Reverend Thomas Clement Browne, and by him, who died, has Anne, daughter of Philip Friell, Esq., and had issue five sons and six recond, Neil Benjamin, born 1809, married Madeline Elinor, only daughter of William Henry Trant of Drumonethy in the county of Limerick, Esq., by whom he has two sons, Neil Benjamin, born June 1843, and William Henry; third, Charles Welland, born 1811, in holy orders. narried Susan Mary D'Oyley, eldest daughter of the Reverend Philip Reverend J. Hodgson, Vicar of St. Peter's, Isle of Thanet; seventh, Ilenrietta Dashwood; eighth, Susanna, married Reverend Thomas Lumsden of Cushnie, in the county of Aberdeen; ninth, Louisa Macleod, reld till his death in London, May 4th, 1841. He married in 1803 Charlotte ssue; tenth, Anne Craigie; eleventh, Alicia Augusta.

Of the three daughters of Sir Archibald, Susama Margaret married James Trevillus of Addington Park in Surrey (now the residence of the Archibishops of Cantelury), by whom she had two sons and four daughters. Early Barton, born 1779, married Elira, daughter of the Reverend John Stardey, D.D., niece of Sir Henry Stardey, of Surner Court, Somerset, Baronet, by whom he has one daughter Elira, married to her coustin 1797, died 1879; third, Susama; fourth, Anne; fifth, Louisa; sixth, Chaldotte, all died unmarried.

Sir Architaths's second daughter Anne Mary, married Major-General Henry Read of Crowcod, in the county of Wills, by whom she had two daughters:—first, Mary Anne, married to J. Richmond Seymour, Esq of Inholmes, in the county of Wills, by whom she had three sons and three daughters: (4) Henry Richmond; (2) Charles Frederick; (3) George; (4) Althere Emma; (5) Jane Mary Susama; (6) Charlotte Esbella; second, Louiss; Sir Archibald's third daughter Sanah, cited young. Sir Archibald Edmonstone manied secondly, Hester, daughter to Sir John Heathcote of Normanton Park, Rutland, Baronct. By her, who died in 1707, he had no issue, and having attained the great age of 89, he died in his house in Argyll Street, London, in July 1807. He was succeeded by nis eldest surviving son Sir Charles, who was born at Greenwich, October 9, 1764 He was educated at Eton, and subsequently at Christ Church, Oxford,1 at both which places he was distinguished for his classical attainments. Having been called to the Bar, he was appointed by Sir Richard Pepper Arden, Master of the Rolls, to be one of the six clerks in Chancery, which office ne held till his father's death. In 1806 Mr. Edmonstone was elected member or the county of Dumbarton, but he lost his seat at the general election which took place in the April following. In 1812 he was again returned to Parliament for Stirlingshire, which seat he retained till his death. Sir Charles was, like his father, a Tory in polities, and he had the satisfaction of supporting Lord Liverpool's administration through the glorious events which terminated the war in 1815. He never however spoke in the House,

Sir Charles Edmonstone married first, Emma," fifth daughter of Richard Wilbraham Bootle, Esq. of Rode Hall, Cheshire, and Lathons House, Lancashire, and by her, who died in November 1797, had a son and daughter: first, Archibald, who succeeded him; and second, Mary Emma, youngest daughter of Beaumont, second Lord Hotham,3 by whom (who remarried in 1832 Charles Woodcock, Esq. of Park Crescent, London, where Frances, born 1842, died 1847; (2.) Louisa Anne; (3.) Charlotte born November 7, 1797. He married secondly, in December 1804, Louisa, she died, August 20th, 18.10) he left four sons and two daughters :- first, William, born January 29, 1810, a commander in the Royal Navy, married whom he has had two sons, Archibald William, born and died in 1865, and Archibald, born 30th May 1867, and nine daughters; (1.) Mary Emma Henrictta; (4.) Jessie; (5.) Frances Euphemia; (6.) Sophia; (7.) in 1841, Mary, eldest daughter of Licutenant Colonel Parsons, C.M.G., by tenant Henry Figon, R.H.A., second son of the late Colonel J. K. Pipon, of Noirmon! Manor, Jersey. 1 Christ Church, Oxford, E.A., February 20, * Rear-Admiral, 15.9; C.B., Member of Parliament for Stirlingshire, 1874. Note 61, Appendix Note 60, Appendix.

* Married, 9th June 1866, to the Rev. John 7 Married, 3d June 1873, to A. R. Duncan, Francis Kit an, Vicar of Antony, Conwall. Esq., Advocate. * Married, 12th October 1872, to Lieu-

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

2

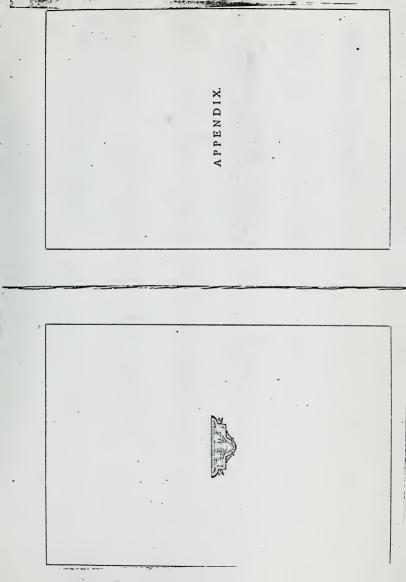

in the 4th Regiment of Bengal Light Cavalry; Brevet Licutenant Colonel; daughters, Louisa Mary, born October 22, 1830, Alice Frances, born Civil Service; fourth, Frederick Neil, born September 7, 1818; Captain fifth, Louisa Henrietta, born July 12, 1807, died in March 1840; she one son, John Hotham, born February 10, 1834, and three surviving Susanne Emily; (8,) Mary Clementina; (9,) Alice Frederica; second, Charles Henry, born October 30, 1811, a major in the army, died of consumption at Edinburgh, November 12, 1847; third, George, born anuary 25, 1816; in the Bengal Civil Service, married Amelia Helen, Hogg, Esq., and widow of Henry Millet of the Bengal married John Kingston of Clairmont, Demerara, Esq., by whom she had December 1, 1831, and Charlotte Anne, born January 11, 1833. Sixth, Amelia Frances, born May 9, 1814. daughter of Sir Charles Edmonstone was seized with paralysis early in the spring of 1820, and died at Brighton, April 1, 1821, in the 58th year of his age.

He was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Archibald Edmonstone, third Baronet, born at 32 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, March 12, 1795. He received his education at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford.3 On the death of his father he was a candidate to succeed him as member for the county of Stirling, but without success. He married, October 10, 1839, his cousingurnian, Emma, third daughter of Randle Wilbraham,' of Rode Hall, Cheshire, Esq., and by her he had three daughters who all died in their infancy:-first, Mary Emma, born July 17, 1833, died 18th August following; second, another daughter of the same names, born September 17, 1834, and died ten days after, and third, Emma, born May 13, 1841, and died June 11 following.5 * Died August 15, 1865. Married, March daughter of Licut. Col. Wm. Smith Neill, of . Chila Church, Oxford, H. A., Nov. 29, 1816. 17, 1863, Henrietta Jane Helen Smith Neill, Barnwell, and Swindridge Mair, Ayrabire. Sir Archibald died, 13th March 1871. Note 62, Appendix.

1 Married, 1st October 1874, to A. Graham Graham Murray, E. g., I'denburgh. Both had a Murray, Eq.; Advocate, only child of T. common ancestor in Lady Mary, daughter of Robert 111, married successively to Sir William Graham and Sir William Ednipustone. Sugaa, =

NOTES

NOTE 1, PAGE 2.

IN 1612 the lands of Edmonstone and Cauldcoats were mortgaged by Andrew Edmonstone of that Ilk, Mary Gordon, his spouse, and John Edmonstone, his eldest ton. to Master Thomas Hope, Advocate, to be holden of His Highness's dearest spouse Anne. Queen of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, as Lady of Dunferline, and the lands and milt of Niddry Marshall, to be holden of His Majesty as superior thereof.

The Atbey of Dunferline, by a grant of David the First, obtained the churches of Newton and Woolmet, and with them the superiority of the lands of Edmonstone, in which parishes these lands were situated.

in 1602. A small palace called the Queen's House was built at Dunferline by Queen 'The temporalty of Dunferline church was annexed to the Crown in 1587. The Abbey, being evenipted, was made a temporal lordship by James the Sixth, and was bestawed by him (together with the Palace of Falkland) as a morning's gift on his consort, Anne of Denmark, on the day after his martiage at Upsal (or Upslo, on the coast of Norway) in 1559. This gift was ratified by Parliament in 1593, and confirmed by infeftment Anne in 1600. This mortgage was redeemed three years after, as shown by a charter of Thomas Hope in John Edmondstone, dated April 5, 1616.

There is a special retour, dated ' Montem Placiti de Inveresk' (where, according to old usage, judicial procedure formerly obtained in the open air), 20th January 1512, before William, Lord Horthwick, and James Douglas, Master of Morton, Bailiest of the Regality 1 Retout, 1512, James the Fourth.

Stewart, natural son of James the Fourth, who This Archibition of St. Andrews and Alexander Will at Fludden neat year with his father. * It appears that noblemen were often Balles to the higher ecclesiastical sees, as the Stewarts, Earls of Lennox, to the Archbishop of Glasgow, etc.

9

of Dunferline, together with Robert, Lord Erskine, on the part of the Right Rev. Father in Christ, Alexander, Arelibishop of St. Andrews, 'Commendatarium monesteriarum de Dunferling et Coldingham,' etc., relating to James Edmonstone of Ednam, as heir to his brother David, for the lands of Edmonstone, In the infeftment which followed of James Edmonstoun there is this peculiarity, that Edmonstoun is spoken of as a barony, though holding of a religious house, and not of the King; 'of which the instances,' Mr. Riddell states, 'are not many, and rarer still in the case of a convent or abbacy than of a high ecclesiastical see. Dunfermline, however, had the right of regality, or was, in other words, a palatinate, or what amounted to that in England."

Edmonstone, for the accidental mutilation of Patrick Edmonstone of Woolmet, the loss The transfer of the property from the Edmonstones to the Raiths seems to have caused some feed, for there is a remission under the Great Seal to James Raith of of his left ann-a serious affair-dated July 1, 1664

NOTE 2, PAGE 3

It would seem that Woolinet became the appanage of a younger branch of Edmonstoun of that Ilk, but I am not aware of any notice of its final alienation. It is now the property of the Earl of Wemyss.

NOTE 3, PAGE 3

It is a curious coincidence that Gilmerton, mentioned as the property of Sir John Herring of Edmonstone, in Clydesdale, is very near Edmonstone in Midlothian, Gilmerton Grange was the seene of a dreadful act of savage vengeance, as related in the "Mentoric of the Somervilles." Sir John Herring having discovered an intrigue carried on in that house lictween his daughter and a monk of Newhattle, set fire to it, and destroyed six or seven other persons together with the culprits. It is stated in a note that the tradition is preserved in the neighbourhood, and that Gilmerton Grange is still called the 'Burnt-dole,'

NOTE 4, PAGE 3.

In Chalmers' 'Caledonia,' vol. i. page 501, there is a mention of the settlement of Review' (Scottish Abbeys and Cathedrals), this is mentioned more at length, and as the reference is to Raine's "North Durham," a work to which I have not access, I give enables us to describe in his own words how the Northambrian colonist settles hinself on the left Lank of the Tweed in the beginning of the 12th century. "To the sons of Holy Mother Church "-thus the Chanter runs -- "Thur the Long, greeting in the Lord; Ednam, by Thorlungus an English colonist. In the 169th number of the 'Quarterly it in the words of the Review :- There is a parehment in the treasury at Durham which Know that Aedgar my Lord, King of the Scots, gave to me Ednaham a waste; that Memorie of the Somerviller, vol. 1. p. 118.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

Cuthbert, and this church, with a ploughgate of land, I have given to God and St. Cuthbert and his Monks, to be possessed by them for evermore. This gift I bave made or the soul of my Lord the King Aedgar, and for the souls of his father and mother, and for the weal of his brothers and sisters, and for the redemption of my dearest brother Lefwin, and for the weat of myself, both my body and my soul ; And if any one by force or fraud presume to away take this my gift from the Saint aforesaid, and the Monks bis servants, may God Almighty away take from him the life of the Heavenly Kingdom, and may he soffer everlasting pains with the Devil and his angels, Amen." This awful degunciation did not secure to St. Cuthhert the spiritual monopoly, at least of the parish, for there were grants given to the monks of Coldingham and Kelso, besides the hospital with his help and my own means I peopled it, and have built a church in honour of St. dedicated to St. Lawrence or St. Leonard, as stated above."

Robert the Second, when High Steward, had granted the lands of Edenham to Sir Robert Ersking, but Sir Robert subsequently resigned them in exchange for a grant in Edenham became early the mother church to the two neighbouring chapels of Newion (Don) and Nenthorn. There is a presentation to the chaplainey of Edenham by ohn Edinonstoun, as tutor or guardian to James, son and heir of David Edmonstoun, which is confirmed by James 1.-1426.

NOTE 5, PAGE 4

To Mr. Elliot, the agent of the Ednam property in 1827, I am indebted for the latelfigence that in 1643 the valuation of the parish of Ednam was £7880 Scots, of which Andrew Edmonstoune possessed 67520. This was subsequently reduced to about ball. At the time of Lord Dudley's purchase, the rental was estimated at £3000, and the estate was the same size as when sold by Mr. Edmonstoune.

NOTE 6. PAGE 5.

One of these sisters married that singular character Theodore Baron Newhoff, who was elected King of Corsica* when that island revolted against the Genoese in 1736. His reign did not extend above cight months, and on his eventually coming to London he there met the lady. He was subsequently impresoned for debt, and died just after his release in 1756. Mr. Aytuun, Professor of Rhetoric in Edinburgh (1849), the lineal descendant of the family of Ednam, informs me that his father attended 'the Queen's' funeral as chief-mounter. There are, I believe, no traces of the family now in Ednam, unless it be the burial-vault.

NOIE 7, PAGE 5.

The charter is Domino Alexandro Scttoni militi terrarum de Culloden jn Moravia -witnesses, Dominus Anghus de Moravia-Alexander de Mowbray, Randulphus de

1 Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. ii. p. 193.

1 Donell's Conica, p. 101, etc.

Soullis, et Thomas de Erskyne.' The charter is without date in an inventory by Anderson of original deeds that once were in the charter-chest of the Earls of Winton. One copy is in the Register Office. The resignation is from the same source. I am indebted to Mr. Riddell for the extract.

NOTE 8, PAGE 5.

the effect that the Baillif of the Crown, 'non onerat se de fermis terrarum de Erlebevio The first notice of the grant of Duntreath is found, as is stated in the text, in an entry in the Compota of the Italivorum ad extra, under the head of the Earldom of Lennox, to (Arlehavan), Drumfin,1 et Duntreyne (Duntreyve, or Duntreath) qui valent in anno sex thros, tresdecim solidos et quatuor denaria quia Rex infeodavit Willielmun de Edmonstone de cisdem."

Also there is this other charge in 1434. 'Et allocatur (computanti) pro quibusdam terris (not mentioned) existentibus in manibus Willielmi de Edmonstone causa junctae infcodationis sponse sue de anno compota-1434, expedient and necessary owing to the doubtful right of the Duchess of Albany Countess For these two important notices I am indebted to Mr. Riddell, who gives the references to Chamberlain's Rolls, tom. 3, page 278-9 and 283. Mr. Riddell adds, 'This older Royal Grant of Duntreath, I believe, was not formerly known. It may have been the more of Lennox to the property in the Earldon of Lennox, owing to the forfeiture of her husband and sons.' To the 'Duchess's Charter' is attached the scal, Lennox impaling Albany, composed in the upper portion of the left half of Stewart of Albany a fess cheque with a label in chief; and in the lower a lion rampant of the Earldon of Fife held by the Duke of Albany, her husband; together with the legend in the circumference. The hearts on each side, and the Tree, are merely incidental. The seal, as also the deed, are in very fine preservation. Halloch Castle, at the junction of Loch Lomond and the river Leven, was the principal residence of the Earls of Lennox, but Inchmorrayue (Inchmurin), whence this and other deeds of the Duchess are dated, was a fortified residence in the island of that name in Loch Lomand, close adjoining to which the Duchess retired, after the death of her family, for security. There is a charter of lands at Drymen by the Duchess to one Dotald Patrick, on condition of furnishing stabling for her horses, as also fire and ludging to such poor persons as might require the same.

Mr. Eddell also found in the chater-clest of Lord Napier a notarial instrument, 9th February 1403, setting forth that then *personaliter constitutus venerabilis vir Donaldus de Lefnax Dominus de Catter' (near Buchanan) produced a charter there narrated as follows :-- Tigo Donaldus comes de Lefnax Salutein ; noveritis me dedisse, confirmasse Murdacho de Lafrax fratri men, totam terram meam que vocatur Dumgoyak cum reddyng una cum monte que vocatur Duntreth, ae onmes terras meas de Margin et de Dunufyn cum suis pertinentibus infra comitatum de Lefnax' to him heritably reddendo Querre The two marked fulls called Dunfyn and Dunguin?

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

for lands and montern a pair of white spurs yearly, apud mancrium de Belach, and ward and relief sectis curie duplicatum ferme. No date-Testibus Waltero filio Alani de Forselane, Finlayo de Campay, Malcolmo filin Duncani Gilmore, filio Malisii, etc. etc.

The notice of Mons of Duntreth, besides Dungoyak, shows that it applies to what is either for the erection of a strenghold, according to tradition, or what seems clear from till called 'the Court Hill' opposite to Dungayak, the top of which has been levelled the statement, for a 'mons placiti' or Moot Hill for holding justiciary courts. The name yet preserved seems to prove this satisfacturily.

Though the old charter by Donald Earl of Lennox is not given, yet Mr. Riddell thinks it must have been at least as old as the middle of the fourteenth century, and consequently this must be the oldest mention of Duntreath. Earl Donald did not survive the reign of David the Second (who died in 1370). He was great-grandfather of Isabella, Duchess of Albany, Countess of Lennox in 1415, and Murduch of Lennox, father of Isabella, the resigner of Duntreath at that time, is a younger brother of the Earl. The feudal privileges attached to Duntreath at so early a period give an additional interest to the locality.

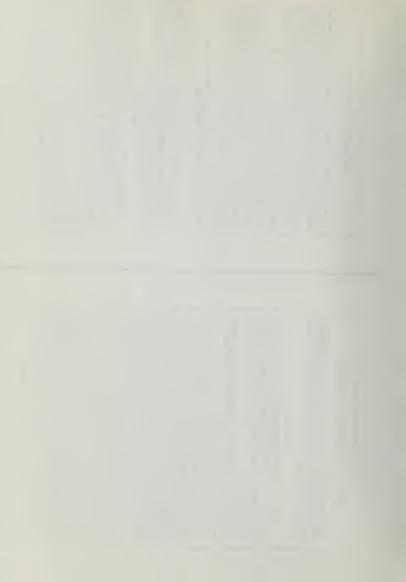

The Lennoxes were descended from Arkel, a Northumbrian refugee to whom the calley of the Leven was granted by Malcolin Canmore.

NOTE 9, PAGE 6.

towards the Church. There is a mortification of the lands of Ballagan, in Strathblane, to the convent of Blackfriars, Glasgow, 'pro salute animae nostrac,' and also those of ber The Duchess' misfortunes naturally led, in the spirit of the times, to munificence father, husband, and two sons who had suffered under James the First, dated at lache. murran, 1445, twenty-one years after their execution.

NOTE 10, PAGE 6.

of Culloden and Marian Stewart, Countess of Angus, the King's aunt, father and mother The charter of confirmation of James the Second, dated Stirling, December 19, 1452, s Willielmo de Edmanstone de Culloden and Mary Countess of Angus (our aunt) in conjunctà infendatione et Willichno de L'dununston corum filio et herede in feodo et hereditate et hereditariis suis, etc., of the lands of Duntreath Arleywin Dunguyock, with the mill thereof. The Quilt lying to the south side of the Burn of Blane, and the half of the lands of Balleun Easter, the Cluncy's Glen, and Gartkalon (?), and mill thereof, all lying within the earldon and shire aforesaid, and all by the same charter erected into a free barony, to be called the Barony of Duntreath. On the resignation of the above William of the said William Edmonstone the younger, tenure in fee and heretage for ever. Cum furca et fossa tgibbet and jaill, yek, yak fprivilege of trying actions), thel et their (relating to franchises of marketl, infangundthef, and outfangandthef (power of executing summary justice when the thirf is detected with the spoil, and so on a long amplification, reddendo, a pound of pepper yearly at Duntreath at the feast of the (Turnbull), Dishop of Glasgow, William Lord Crichton our Chancellor, and dearly beloved cousin, Andrew Lord Gray, Master of our Household, Mr. James Lindsay, Provost of the nativity of John the Baptist, if asked only. Reserving to the same William of Culloden, Collegiate Church of Lynclandene (Lincluden), Mexander Nairn, of Sandford, our Compand the said Marion Countess of Angus, and longest liver of their their liferent. William troller, and Mr. George Shoreswood, Chancellor of Dunkeld, and Clerk,

The evereise of the great fundal powers as granted above was finally put an end to by the act abolishing heritable jurisdictions, 1748, though much had fullen into disuse. A fragment of the old stocks yet remain at Duntreath as a memorial of 'the good old times."

NOTE 11, PAGE 7.

Mr. Riddell kindly procured me' a copy of this deed from the charter chest of the Duke of Montrose. It is slightly abbreviated.

100

que subscriptione manuali ut mihi apparuit munitam tradidit perlegendam, comparandam tenor sequitur et est talis. We grant and permittis to our cousing Johne Lord Dernlie, that Chancellor Andro Lord Avendale the said lands of the Earlton of Levynav in herent, als frely and in sicklyke forme as our foresaid Chancellor had the sampn lands of us before,1 And als qubill our cousing Wilyeam Edmonstrum of Duntreath he made sikker (sure) be the said Johne Lord Derulie for his part, and in so far as he may of the lands of Duntreth, in the same I ridome, qubilk he has be infolment and goft heretably of our progenitour Unmes the Second of before, that our said Chancellour and cousing Willyam of Edmon. Stoun beand contentaid sikker, as said is, in the best forme that can be divisit we sall (give B) ou incuntinent therafter again to the said Lord Dernlie all his said lands of Dernlie, Inchenane, Torboltoun, Dregarn, Galstoun, and Bathkat, and infeft him heretably therin In Dei noniine. Amen. Per hoc presens publicum instrumentum cunctis pateat Pontificatus (of Pope Sextus 4th) anno sexto. In mei notarii publici et testium subscriptorum presentia personaliter constitutus nobilis et potens Dominus Johannes Comes de Levynext ac Dominus Dernlie mihi notario publico infra scripto quandem literam in papiro scriptam sub sigillo privato Supremi Domini nostri Regis . . . emanatam et sigillatam ejustransumendam et in publicam formam instrumentalem redigendam. Cujus quidem litere for samikill as he has resignit in our hands his lands of the Lordshipe of Dernlie Inchechenane I, ande, in the sheriffdoine of Renfrew, Torboltoune, Dregairn, and Galstoun, Iyand in the sheriffdome of Ayr, and the lands of Batheat, lyand in the sherriffdome of Edinburgli, to remain in our hands qubile (until) his entre to his part of the lands of the Earldome of Levynav, and thereafter qubile he haif infeft and gyffyne to our weilhelovit chusing and Dungroyable, the Qulut, Ballewane, Mairgare, Enbaly, the Glyn, and Carcane lyande evidenter, et sit notum quod anno Incarnationis Domini (1477 24 June) indictione decima

* These localities are no longer known by these There is in the Great Seal Record a chatter by James III. of the comitatos de languas to the and Chancellor for his life, dated May 4, 1471.

THE FAMILY OF EDITONSTONE.

als frely as he held thame of before, without cost or expense or any impediment. Wrytten under our privat sele, and subscryvit with our hand at Stirling, the 21st day of June, and of our regne the thirtene yer (1472-3). Subscript litere. James. Super quibus omnibus et singulis prefatus Dominus Comes de Levynax et Dominus Dernlie petiit a me notario publico infra scripto, unum seu plura publicum seu publica, instrumentum seu instrumenta, Acta erant hace in civitate Glasguensis sub anno, mense, die indictione et pontificatu. Et ego Alanus Gray, Preshyter Glasguensis, etc. (being the usual notarial attestation).

NOTE 12, PAGE 8.

The merk or mark was 13 shillings and fourpence. This, however, calculated in Scottish muncy, was only thirteen pence and one-third of a penny sterling.

NOTE 13, PACE 9.

the county of Antrim, which contains 5000 acres, Irish plantation measure, was the first terian minister. Since that time, namely, for more than two centuties, there have been but appointed 1700, died 1759, and the fourth and present, is Mr Bankhead, appointed 1763, The following curious passage is from a periodical :-- 'The parish of Braidisland, in Presby terian parish of the plantation in the reign of James the First which had a Presbyfour ministers. The first was the Rev. Edward Bryce, appointed in 1611, and died in 1636. The second, Mr. Cunningham, appointed 1645, died 1697. The third, Mr. Cobham, who is now ninety-four years of age, in perfect health and spirits. There is but one inhabitant of the parish that is not a Presbyterian.' - Dublin Penny Journal.

NOTE 14, PAGE 9.

The property, which was, as has been stated in the text, one of the forfeited estates of obtained a grant of it from the Crown. It contained at the time of the purchase 1870 acres, and the yearly rent was fixed at £160, 9s. 4d. sterling. The mansion-house of Red. was required to he erected within a limited time, and forty-eight able-bodied colonists the O'Neils, was let on a perpetual fee farm lease by John Dalway of Bellahill, who had hall was built in accordance with the terms by which all these estates were granted. On all lands exceeding 2000 acres a house or castle, surrounded by a basin or walled enciosure, were to be settled. Title Reid's Hist. Presbyterian Churches in Ireland, vol. i., page 81. Also Dr. Hodgkinson MSS. Memoir.

NOTE 15, PAGE 10.

For this interesting letter I am indebted to Mr. Riddell, who copied it from the Errol Charters at Slains Castle. The whole history of this marriage of William Livingston with Lady Dundee is a curious one. Though the way by which Lord Dundee came by his death-wound is now ascertained, for a time there were several contradictory reports aflost. In the notes to Chambers's interesting history of the Rebellion in Scatland is the following :- A Lowland cavalier story which has never been hitherto noticed in not then come to the Peerage, entertained for his lady." It seems by this story that he was suspected of having himself fired the fatal shot, and it goes on to state that Dundee's sent Livingston a white night-cap, a pair of white gloves, and a rope, as indicative of her guilty pair, 'praying to God that should He see fit to permit the unworthy couple to go out of the world without some visible taken of 11 is indignation, He would be pleased to print ascribes the fate of the hero to a passion which William, third Viscount of Kilsyth, mother was so convinced of this, that on the new year's morning which succeeded, she opinion. It is said, moreover, that she imprecated a curse upon the marriage of the make her some especial revelation to prevent her from utterly disbelieving His providence and justice. On the day of their marriage, moreover, Livingston presented his bride with which was given to my grandfather. My futher likewise became massessed of another larger a ring, which she lost immediately, and which was considered a bad omen. A century after, the ring was found in a field near Colzium, with the inscription 'Yours till deathe,' ring, with a similar inscription, ' Yours only and ever, which Lady Dundee probably had given to her husband. The tragic termination gives a peculiar interest to this curious held it a very short time, and then sold it to Sir Archibald Edmonstone in 1783. The The forfitted estate of Kilsyth was, with others, disposed of by the Barons of the Scottish Exchequer to 'the Company of Undertakers for raising the Thames water in York Buildings, London, in the year 1711. The Company became bankrupt, and the property passed into the hands of Mr. Campbell of Shawfield, who appears only to have sum paid for East and West Baronies of Kilsyth, including the lands of Bancloich, in the parish of Campsie, was about £41,000.

NOTE 16, PAGE 11.

the parashioners of Moniabrugh, and of the Laird of Kilsyth's tenants, to General Monk, wise petitions of Sir James Livingston of Kilsyth to the King's Commissioner for Josses part of the tenants of Kilsyth and Bantoun, purporting 'that the enemy on his march from Among the Kilsyth Records are some of historical interest relating to the time of the Interregram. Of those more immediately connected with the locality, is a supplication by to be referred from quartering of troops and other services, dated 1658. There are likeincurred by quarterings, and planderings, and burning of his house, also of his tenants, the substance of which latter petition is the same as that preferred to the Scots Parliament while Charles the Second was exercising the regal functions in Scotland. In the Acts of the year 1631 there is a 'Supplication to the King's most excellent Majesty' on the Edinburgh to Glasgow, two several times in October and February last, came to the aforethe enemy having placed a garrison in the house of Kilsyth, the said garrison was for the space of nine weeks entertained by the tenants of the said lands, who beside were said lands, and there quartered with his whole army for the space of NOIE 17, PAGE 11.

THE FAMILY OF EDIVONSTONE.

November paid great Sesses to the garrisons of Sterling, Airth, Craigbarnet, Duntreath, etc. and in like manner the aforesaid tenants having for security put their whole victual (which the petition for consideration by Committee of Estates. It appears, however, from the above mentioned petitinns of Sir James and of his tenants, which, though without date, are indursed 1661, that the inquiry ordered by the Parliament of 1651 had been prevented by the invasion frum England which immediately followed. Whether any pecuniary indennification followed this later application does not appear, but Sir James was plundered and spoiled at pleasure by that garrison, and sicklike the said tenants have since were left unexhausted for helping to sow the ground), the same, with their cluthes and other goods belonging to them, were totally burnt and destroyed with the house. They therefore implore their condition to be taken into account. The Estates of Parliament remitted inmediately raised to the Peerage, which, however, he did not enjoy above a few weeks.

NOTE 18, PAGE 12.

The Edmonstones of Woolmet were a cadet branch of the elder line, but I presume it to be extinet.

NOTE 19, PAGE 12.

Regarding the family in Shetland, my information is derived from a letter I received I have copied this notice from the 'Beauties of Scotland, vol. iii. page 434. If the date be 1658 or 1698, and not 1658, it would refer to the notorious freebooter himself. from Dr. Lawrence Edmonstone, dated Baltasound, February 15, 1834.

I believe that a direct branch of the Cambus-Wallace line lives, or lived a few years ago, in the parish of Higgar. A younger brother of the last Edmonstone of Newton bought a property in that parish, and called it Cambus-Wallace.

NOTE 20, PAGE 12.

I am indebted for this and other interesting information relating to the elder line of Ednam to William Edmondstoune Aytoun, Esq., Professor of Rhetoric, Edinburgh University, who is the oldest representative of that line. Nisbet gives as the authority for the Ednam coat 'Workman's illuminated Book of Arms,' who was Berald in the reign of lames the Sixth. Besides this, Mr. Niddell kindly furnished me with a copy of 'the matriculation of the arms of Edmonstone of that Ilk and Edmonstone of Duntreath, in treath the same, wyt an annulet in fesse gules, alias a mallet, alias a star." In a more modern hand, ' Edmondston of that IIk, argent on a bend, gules, three annulets, or in chief Porteous and Staces's Index: 'Edmundston or - 3 Cressents gules. Edmundston Dun--a unicornis head sable."

NOTE 21, PAGE 13.

Garrock scals, should be omitted in the attested cupy mentioned here. Moreover, this It is emicus that the annulet, which is distinctly given in Mr. Riddell's copy of the attested copy has been subsequently partially retouched with a pen. The coronet, which seems at the first drawing to have resembled that as now emblazoned, a modern ducal one, is changed into that re-embling Mr. Riddell's transcript, something more like an Earl's without the balls, -and the crest has been gone over with a pen. There is an obvious desire in Crawfurd, as will be stated more at length hereafter, to ignore the a reason for the omission of the annulet in the attested copy, which Mr. Riddell found in the original. But the annulet does not appear at that early period to have been considered the main stem (of which there are several contemporary instances in other families); in other words, part of the arms of the Lady, wife of the Edmonstone of that Ilk and mather January 20, 1507. Again, in the arms of Duntreath at Dunkeld, as mentioned above, the existence of the Ednam as the elder branch of the line, and I cannot but think that may be as a mark of cadetcy. The circumstance of it being the distinction, as now, of the fifth son, Mr. Riddell states to be modern, and more modern in Scotland even than in England. He thinks it might possibly be 'a maternal difference distinguishing the Duntreath from of the Culleden or Duntreath founder, whose er that was. 'Or, on the other hand, it might have been a difference derived from a feat in chivalry by such as the chivalrous Archibald Edmonstone (as mentioned by Fordun) at the end of the fourteenth century, he having borne way the ting at some encounter. At the same time, this badge seems somewhat arbitrarily omitted for Mr. Riddell has furnished me with a sketch of a seal of Sir William, grandson of him to whom the Garvock scal belonged, in which the arms are given in full, without the annulets, and with the coronet and crest. It was appended to the Infeltment upon a Royal Precent of Archibald Napier of Monteith in lands in Monteith, to which the official seal of William Edmonstone of Duntreath, as Stewart of Monteith, is affixed. It is dated annulet is omitted; and, on the other hand, in the list of arms made by Sir James Balfour, Lord Lyon, in 1680, in MSS, in the Advocates' Library, the coat of Edmonstone of Dun-reath is given with the annulet.

2

NOTE 22, PAGE 14.

Mr. Riddell writes-'The coronet at the time is remarkable, being differently in the

I am aware of extended to commoners. He adds in another letter--' The coronet strikes Duntreath. Could it have referred to some claim grounded upon promise or contract to the Tarblom of Lemmos which is countenanced by a tradition or kind of writing in the furd took no notice of it, and assuredly he was not a person to neglect anything likely to fifteenth century from now, only Jorne above the belinet by Peers, and not in any instance me as a poculiar and unprocedented bearing then in the case of William Eduanatone of family? The tradition to which Mr. Riddell alludes is an assertion in a Ms. pedigree, not Crawford's, to the effect that the Duchess of Albany made a grant to Sir William and his wife, the Counters of Angus, of the Earldon of Lennox in fee. But this succession was defeated by the attainder of Murdach, Dake of Albany, and Duncan, Lad of Lennox, father of the Duchess. There is evidently, however, a great confusion of facts and dates, and I cannot discover the slightest authority upon which such tradition rested. Crawggrandise his employers.

THE FAMILY OF EDINONSTONE.

I should add that, as regards the motto, I have no ancient evidence whatever; indeed they were not common till the end of the sixteenth century.

Bockenbergius. Egmondarum potentissinae Hollandiae gentis-Hist. Lug., 1548. NOTE 23, PAGE 15.

In the Ednam Ms., and also in Crawfurd's, it is stated that Edmundus is witness to a charter by David the First to Walter de Riddell of the lands of Riddell. From a copy, however, of that charter, afforded me by Mr. Riddell, I find this is altogether incorrect. And also, Catalngus et brevis Historia Antistitum Egmondarum. NOTE 24, PAGE 16.

NOTE 25, PAGE 19.

Crawfuid's MS., makes the date 1212 instead of 1252. There is another charter of the same William, son of Henry de Craigmillar, to Dunferlin of 'illad toftum quod Henri-The above is taken from the Earl of Haddington's collections. Niebet, mistaking cus de Edmundiston tenuit de Menrico de Craiginillar patre meo,' dated 1254.

NOTE 26, PAGE 19.

There are, moreover, in the passession of Mr. Aytoun, two deeds; one a confirmation without date by Willielmus de Lysuris: 'Thomac file Willielmi de Maleville et Christiane sponsae sone et heredibus de illis excuntibus,' of a grant made by Gregorius Lysuris of six acres of Temple lands, with some others in the vicinity. Testibus-Nesso de Ramysay, Henrico de Edmundiston, Radulpho de Claro. The other deed is by the same William de Lysuris, a confirmation to certain individuals of subjects in the fief of Gourton, and witnessed by the same witnesses, Nessus de Ramysey and Henry de Edmundiston, with the addition of Dominus Ricardus Mariscallus, and others. Mr. Riddell informs me that there were two eminent members of the Ramsay family of the name of Nessus, one who lived in the earlier and the other in the later part of the thirteenth century. The signatures must belong to the furner, for the William Abbot of Dunferline, mentioned above in the text, died in 1237.

NOTE 27, PAGE 19.

in 1296. This was however a family quite distinct from the Edmonston of Midlothian, of whom nothing but this notice is known. As stated at the commencement of this memoir there is no traceable connexion between Edmonstone in Lanarkshire and the present There is a Baldewyn de Edmeiston in the county of Lanark who subscribed the Roll family of the name.

The origin of the term Raginan Roll is doubtful. In Collice's Annals of the Stage is the following passage: -- 'Mr. Donce says Ragman Roll is used by old writers to express any legal instrument. The etymology has been much disputed. Wynkyn de Werde printed a poem, a fragment of which only remains, called Ragmannes Roll, consisting of a list of good and bad women in alternate stanzas. It is a name given to the Devil. In the Encyclopaedia flritannica there is a different explication of the term,

There is rather a curious coincidence as regards the two charters of the coronership, NOTE 28, PAGE 20.

The former, to Sir John, his heirs and assigns, is dated Aberdeen, 4th November, twentythird year of King David the Second, which would be 1352, seven years before he was served heir to his futher; the other, restricting the grant to his own life, is dated Aberdeen, November 4th, thirty-third year of our reign, which would be 1362.

omnibus probis hominibus suis ad quos presentes literae pervenerint, salutem. Sciatis and concessions dilecto et fideb nostro Johanni de Edmondstoun et heredibus suis, et suis assignatis offictum Coronariae Landoniae cum pertinentibus suis tenendis et habendis eidem Johanni heredibus suis et assignatis cum omnibus et singulis fendis, rectis, consuctudinibus, libertatibus, commoditatibus aissamentis, et justis pertenentibus quibuscunique addictum officium spectantibus, seu quoquomodo juste spectare valentibus in futurum: Quibus omnibus et singulis quorum interest, vel interesse poterit distincte precipimus et mandamus quatenus cidem Johanni haeredibus suis et suis assignatis in pmnibus et singulis quae ad dietum officium pertinent, respondeant, pervenient, et intendant sub poena quae competet in hae parte. In cujus rei testimonium praesentibus sigillum nostrum precepinus apponi apud Aberdonium quarto die Novembris, anno regni nostri The following are the terms of the first Charter :- David Dei gratia Rex Scotorum vicesimo tertio.

As regards the office of Coroner, Baron Hume, in his Commentaries on the law of Scotland, says, "This officer, Coroner, now unknown in our practice, is specified as a subsixting and necessary officer in the ordinance of Edward the First. One principal part of his duty seems to have been by arrestment of the person, effects, or otherwise, to secure the comparance of offenders for trial. Several instances are then adduced. Hume, Comment, vol. ii. page 24, note.

in favour of Sar John Edmond-tone, this nobleman's (William Lord Somerville's) own grandfather, to the lands and barony of Cambusnethan, which for a long time belonged to the name of Baird who was heritar of that harony before the forfushine. The charters bear date the sevent configure of that King's reign, A.D. 1351? Mr. Kiddell states that there is a charter by David the Second to Sir Alexander Smart of Dandey, dated December 26, The author of the Memorie of the Somervilles is very pertinacious in his error about the acquivition of Cambusnethan. "The same year," he continues, "wherein the nation was in consternation (about the Earl of Douglas, 1451) there is an instrument taken by wherein is contained and insert three ancient charters granted by King David the Second him (William Lord Somerville), in the hands of John Geddes, publick Natar of Glasgow, NOTE 29, PAGE 23.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE

1354 of the lands and barony of Cambusnethan, formerly held by Sir Robert Baird, Knight, and there are more documents to prove the same disposition; there must therefore be some thorough mistake of the author of the Menioric, though he appears so circumstantial for her marriage with the Earl of Douglas in 1371. It was printed from the original at The Earl's father being then alive, the dispensation runs, 'dilecti fili nubilis viri Jacobi nati dilecti filii nobilis viri Willielmi conitis de Douglas et dilecti in Christo filii nobilis mulieris Margarite carissimi in Christo filii Roberti Regis Scotie illustris nati.* They were stated to be in the fourth degree of consanguinity, which rendered the dispensation necessary, which was granted on the supplication of Charles King of France and David King of Scotland. In the chartulary of Kelso she is called Isabella, for there is a precept by Robert the Second to the Shariff of Selbirk in Jayour 'Isabelle snonse ounnearn Jacobi conitis de Douglas' to give her 'rationabilem tertiam' of all the lands of which the Earl, ber husband, had died seised, within his jurisdiction. For these I am indebted to Mr. Riddell. This Princess is likewise called Margaret, for she was thus styled in a dispensation Rome by Andrew Stewart in his History of the Stewarts (Supplement, page 439).

NOTE 30, PAGE 25.

ample testimony. There is a chatter of Robert the Second (1399) Johanni de Edmonstone Ednam, in the county of Roxburgh, which grant was confirmed by his successor, Robert the Third, in a charter Johanni de Edmonston militi et Isabellae Comitissae de Douglas Of the marriage of the Countess of Douglas with Sir John Edmonstone there is et Isabellae Comitissae de Douglas sponsae suae filiae nostrae carissimae of the lands of sorori nostrae carissinae of the lands of Ednam to the survivor and to their legitimate

These testimonies are given by Crawford from the Ednam charter chest, at least must be, for they do not exist, Mr. Riddell says, upon record. But there is a further natice, for which I am indebted to Mr Riddell, of a charge or payment by the Treasurer or Chamberlain! of Scotland in 1399, 'Domino Johanni de Edmonstene percipiente ratione Comitissae de Douglas sponsae sune tertiam partem dictarum ducentarum mercarum ratione tertie sibi contingenti' out of the customs of Haddington. The Farl having had therefore an heritable pension, this was only a payment in part. There are likewise notices of four subsequent payments between 1392 and 1398. heirs, dated at Edinburgh, April 25, 1392.

NOTE 31, PAGE 25.

The pedigice states that Sir John I'dmonstone had also a daughter by the Countess of Douglas married to Sir Andrew Kerr of Kershaugh, in Tevisidale, cupbearer to Robert the Third, from which marriage the Lothian family are descended. To this Mr. Riddell states, ' Mary, daughter of Sir John Edmonstone, could not have married Sir Andrew Kerr of Kershaugh, cupheater to Robert the Third, as, whatever genealogists may pretend, there was no such person, and no proper proof can be discovered of his existence.

1 Chamberfain's Rolls, tom lii. p. 139.

Otterbourne, Froissard' mentions Messere Johan Amonstan. Every one knows the bavoc that lively narrator makes of English and Scottish names. In the modernized edition of Lord Berner's translation it is given, and no doubt correctly, Sir John Edinonstone, There is, however, the addition of David his son, which of course could not be, as Sir David, Sir John's successor, was son of this Earl of Douglas's widow. In the Paris edition of Froissard, 1505, I understand there is no mention of the son. In Johne's translation, however, it stands," Sir John Amonstan, David filium, Robert Colemnic, In a subsequent enumeration, however, given by Johne's but omitted in Lord Berner's, it stands Sir John Emonston, Sir William Vadan, David Ferrier, Robert Colomine (Campbell according to Lord Berner). I am inclined therefore to think that the David in both places applies to a David Flening, Amonstan and Emonston being both obviously misnomers, in all pro-Among the noblemen and knights who joined the Earl of Douglas before the battle bability for Edmonstone.

NOTE 32, PAGE 25.

The documents relative to Tillyallan are numerous. I am indebted for them, chiefly to Mr. Riddell, and give them according to their dates.

Precept by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, appointing Robert Logan, Laird of Restalrig, William Preston of Benryne, Knights, his Laillies, to give seizin to Sir John of Edmonstone of the lands of Tillyallan and fortable thereof, dated Edinburgh, August 2, 1401.

Charter by the same Earl of Douglas and Lord of Gallonay to the same, his heirs and assignces, of the fortalice, with the pertinents lying within the said Earl's lands of the Blessed Trinity, 1102 -Witnesses, Domino Johanni de Swynton, Domino Willichmo Tillyallan, within the sheriffdom of Perth, to be held blench, dated Edinburgh, Feast of Senescallo, Domino Willichno de Borthwyck, militibus, etc.

Charter by the same Earl to Sir John Edmonstone of the same lands, to be holden ward of the Earl, so long as he shall continue to perform the services due out of the same to the Larl of Strathern, third Lord thereof, dated Edinburgh, July to, 1403. William Aberrethy, William Hay, William Borthwick, Knights-witnesses,

Commission by the same Earl appointing Sir John Edmonstone baile of the said

Letter by William Preston, bailie to the same Earl, testifying that he had given lands, dated August 2, 1407.

seizen in the same lands to his dearest cousin Sir John Edmonstone before Sir John Stewart of Inventeath, dated April 5, 1410.

Confirmation by Enfemia, Countess Palatine of Strathern, emfirming to her cousin, David of Edmus tone, the former grants to his father, Sir John, of the said lands, dated lands, dated Hellyn (probably Methyen, a seat of the Earl of Strathern), March 30, 1414. Precept by the Counters to the same David, as beir of his father in the aforesaid at Perth, March 18, 1414.

. Johne's Translation, vol. is. p. 239 and 264. · Berner's Modernired Translation, vol. ni. p. 633. 1 Problemed, Paris, 1705, vol. iii, p. 58.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

Charter by Archibald of Douglas, son and heir of the said Archibald, Earl of Douglas, confirming the writs of the said lands of Tillyallan, granted by the said Earl and Patrick Count Palatine and the said Eufemia Countess Palatine, his wife, and cousts of the said Archibald of Douglas, in favour of the said Sir John and David of Edmonstone. dated at Edinburgh, 1418. George Preston of Gorton (the ancient inheritance of the Prestons of Craigmillar), William Preston of Benjin, Archibald de Edmonstone, Knights. William de Edmonstone, Gillort de Wauchope (of Niddry Marshall), witnesses.

NOTE 33, PAGE 26.

Sir James Edmonstone is witness to a charter granted to William, Lord Crichton, in 1410, and in 1458 he had an investment of a portion of his estate of Ednam under the Great Seal upon his own resignation, mistake I am indebted to Mr. Riddell. The documents are numerous in reference to the As mentioned in the text, only the marriage of Sir James Edmonstone with Janet Napier is mentioned in the pedigrees, and John Edmonstone is stated to be the second son of Sir David, succeeding to his brother in default of male issue. For clearing up this marriages and succession of Sir James. I will give them in order:-

There is an instrument under the hand of Richard Robertson, notary, testifying that the bands for the marriage between the said Sir James Edmonstone and Janet Napier were proclainsed in the church of St. Giles, Edinburgh, in January 1456; But that he had been previously married, and that the marriage had been dissolved, is attested by an Instrument under the hands of William Blair and Robert Lynton, notaries, testifying that Isabell Forstare, daughter of the deceased Sir John Forstare (Forrester) of Corstorphine. Knight, had renounced the appeal which she had entered against a sentence pronounced by Richard, Abbut of Culross, and Makedin Drunnmond, canon of Dumblane, Commisearies for Robert, Bishop of Dumblane, in a process of divorce against her by the said Sir James of Edmonstone, dated at Edmburgh, February 5, 1456 -- Witnesses, William Edmonstone of Duntreath, Knight, etc.

for John Edmonstone, who continued the descent with the bulk of the paternal inheritance, Such divorces in the Roman Church arose usually from marriages having been contracted within the forbidden degrees of relationship, which were very extensive. But when this had been done in good faith, or in ignorance, by either party, the legitimacy of the offspring was not affected. That seems to have been the case in the present instance, was probably the son of Isabel Forcester, for no third marriage has been traced, and he clearly was only stepson to Janet Napier.

The instrument testifying to the proclamation of the bands between Sir James and Janet Napier, as mentioned above, is dated eight years after the marriage, September 19, 1464. This must have been a precautionary measure, as Mr. Riddell suggests, ansing from some question as to the dworce. The instrument is witnessed by members of the There is an instrument of resignation on the occasion of this second marriage by ames and Janet Napier, dated Falkland, January 28, 1456. Also a Royal charter grounded on this resignation, dated three days later, to both which George, Bishop of Brechin, the Chancellor of Scotland, and John, Earl of Athole, are among the witnesses.

Napier family.

of Tillyallan, into the hands of James the Second, for a new infettment to the said Sir Lords of Cruncil, namely, Andro, Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scutland, Colin, Earl of Argyle, Andrew, Lord Gray, Alexander, Lord Glammis, William, Lord Forbes, and many others of the nobility, at the instance of William Douglas of Colney Warden, of Janet Sir James, concerning the terce of the lands of Edmonstone pertaining to Sir James at his death, dated St. Andrews, March 16, 1464. This disputing of Janet Napier's legal The direct descent of John Edinonstone is moreover proved by a decreet before the Napier, and others, against John Edmonstone of that Ilk, son and heir of the deceased right would seem still to convey doubts as to the legality of the previous divorce of (pro-Twenty years later there is an instrument of resignation by Janet, Lady Edmonstone, of her fee of the lands of Tillyallan, and of the Thanedom of Boyne, in favour of Elizaoably) John's mother, Isabel Forrester.

beth and Margaret, her daughters and heiresses thereof. This is dated St. Andrews,

And on 13th February 1485 is a precept by Margaret Edmonstone, the other daughter of Sir James and wife of Walter Ogilvie of the Thanedom of Boyne, and for giving seisin to A year earlier, namely, January 3, 1483, is an instrument of seisin of Elizabeth Edinonstone of half of the lands of Tillyallan, as one of the heiresses of her father Sir James. her sister Ehrabeth, wife of Patrick Blackadder, of half of the lands of Tillyallan and patronage of the church in evchange for the half of the Thanedom of Boyne and a rent of six merks due out of the town of Banff. This refers to the exchange as mentioned in Mr. Riddell has afforded me also the following notice from the inventory whence the information given above is derived, namely, a dispensation by Robert, Alchbishap of Glasgow, in consequence of a recript from Julian, Bishop of Ostia, allowing Patrick Blackadder and 1.brabeth 1.dunonetone to be married again, and legitimizing their former children, their former muriage being void in regard the said Patrick had carnally known a woman related to the said Elizabeth in the fourth and fourth and another fourth degrees of affinity," dated at Glargow, June 5, 1494. Witnesses, Charles and John Blackadder. 1 do not pretend to and estand what these degrees of affinity mean, but there is one curious circonstance here, that the Robert, Archbishop of Glasgow, through whom this dispensation was obtained, was son of the same Patrick Blackadder and Elizabeth Edmonstone, and con equently his own highlings, was concerned. He was appointed to the sec of Glasgow in 1481, which was raised to an Archepiscopate during his incumbency.

In conclusion, we may remark that Janet Napier, the mather of these coheiresses, must have married Sir James Edmonstone very young, and, moreover, must have lived sire's wife, and Adam Hume, her husband.' This is from the Record of the Supreme Civil Court, Book xii, p. 167. Grandschir or grandsire, Mr. Riddell states, means great to a good old age, for in 1491 she was the wife of Alexander Hepburn of Whitsome, and in 1512 she was still alive and married to a third husband, Adam Hume, as is proved by a litigation concerning the 'terce of Janet Napier, James Edmunstone of Ednam's grand. grandfather, though sometimes grandfather; goodsire or gudschir being the term more ordinarily used for grandfather.

1 Renth's Catals gue of Scottish Berhops.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

NOTE 34, PAGE 31.

This Princess appears to have been richly endowed. On her marringe with the Earl of Angus, King Robert the Third granted the lands of Abernethy and Bonhill, with the profits of the justiciary court of the Sherifidom of Forfar to his daughter and the longest liver. And she got the Barony of Dalrymple in Ayrshire as her dower from her husband

Stirling, and died without issue. Gilbert, the second son, was created a peer, and from integrity, to direct the councils of government. Buchanan, who was little prejudiced in Of the Countess's two sons by the Earl of Angus, William succeeded his father, and dying a young man, was succeeded by his son James as third Earl. He dying without children, the Earldom came to George, the Lady Mary's second son, by whom the line was continued. Of this Princess's three sons by Sir James Kennedy, some mystery hangs over the fate of John, the eldest, who was several years kept imprisoned in the Castle of him the present family of Cassilis and Ailsa is lineally descended. By far the most rentarkable was Jaines, the third son. Being brought up for holy orders, he was first raised to the see of Dunkeld, and afterwards became Dishop of St. Andiews, the primacy having not as yet been raised to an Archepiscopate. During the minority of James the Third be was intrusted with the charge of the young Prince, and at his death, which occurred in 1466, "and which may truly be considered a national calamity," he possessed the chief management of the State, 'and was the only one able,' says Tytler, 'from firmness, ability, and layour of churchmen, says, 'His death was so deeply deploted by all good men that the country seemed to weep for him as for a publick preent. He fearabled the College of St. Sir James Kennedy,

Patrick Graham, second son of the Counters of Angus by Sir William Graham, succeeded his half-brother, James Kennedy, in the see of St. Andrews, which, on his personal application to Rome, was raised to an Archbishoprick. He was a worthy and learned, but unfortunate man, for having excited by his elevation the enty of the elergy, they procured from James the Third the Archbushop's imprisonment in Lochleven Castle, Salvador at St. Andrews, where he died in 1478,

The time of the Countess of Angus's death is not known, but in the pavement of the modern church of Strathblane, which occupies the site of the old one, is a stone, stating that beneath it were busied the Counters of Angus and also her descendant, Archibald Edmonstone, Esq. of Duniteath and Redhall, who died in 1683. Heing desirous of axer-

NOTES TO GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

taining if there were any vault beneath the church, I commissioned my friend William Smith, F.sq. of Carbeth Guthric, the Rev. James Pearson, the minister of the Parish, and James Maclaten, F.sq., my factor, to open the grave, regretting much my inability to be present myself. The following is the report these gentlemen afforded me :-

'In consequence of instructions from Sir Archibald Edmonstone, Bart, a grave-stone in the centre passage of the church, bearing the following inscription, was this day removed. "Here lyes in the same grave with Mary, Countess of Angus, sister to King James the First of Scotland, from whom he is lineally descended, Archibald Edmonstone, Eso. of Duntreath, in this kingdom, and of Redhall in Ireland, who died in the year 1689, aged about fifty-one years."

The earth having been removed to the denth of about two feet, a quantity of human bones were found, including a skull pretty entire. From the sire they appeared to be those of a male. On digging deeper, the remains of another skeleton were discovered, the bones of which, being of a smaller size, were considered to be those of a female. The skull smaller than that of the other skeleton, and in a better state of preservation. A portion of the jaw bone, with the teeth nearly entire, was also found. There was no appearance of any vault or stone coffin. It was ascertained from an aged inhabitant that the stone had remained in the same position as it did in the old church, so there can be no reason for doubting that the remains found were those of the Princess Mary of Scotland and her descendant Mr. Edmonstone. The remains were carefully redenosited and the stone replaced. The whole operations were conducted in our presence.

"WILLIAM SMITH, of Carbeth Guthrie. JAMES PEARSON, Minister, Strathblane, (Signed)

AMES MACLAREN, Factor, Duntreath.

STRATHELANE MANSE, 26th October 1811.

A tooth, which fell from the jaw of the Lady Mary, is in my possession as an interest-

NOTE 35, PAGE 33.

These names and connexions are on the authority of Crawfurd's MSS. Genealogy, but without any voucher evecut for the marriage of James Edmonstone with Helen Murray. Douglas, under the title of Oliphant, dues not mention this marriage. In one point Cray fard is evidently mistaken. He speaks in this place of a second daughter, Mary, married to Hungdary Cumingham of Glengarnock. But this clearly belongs to the previous generation, for the receipt of the dower of this marriage is dated 1464, whereas Sir Willem married Mattlda Stewart only in 135. The Mary married to Glengarnock must be the same whom Crawford states to have married Sir Adam Conningham of In the Treasurer's accounts for Scotland for the years 1458 to 1492 is the following :-"Item, to Archibald Edmonstone for the biggin and reparation of the Hunt Hall, like as his bil beyris, £13, 11s. 3d.' The Hunt Hall is mentioned in another item, but I do not know where it was.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

NOTE 17, PAGE 14.

Drummond family,"-Nimmo, History of Stirlingshire, p. 483. There is the name of alled the Star of Monteith. The property of Lord Napier in 1624, and now of the Blair Nimmo says 'there is a retour of Edmonstone of Ballinton in 1619. It was lames unele of the Laird of Duntreath, among those absent from an assize in 1534.

NOTE 38, PAGE 34.

By Janet Edinonstone he had three daughters, who married Sir John Somerville of Cambusnethan, Walter Master of Drunnond, and John Murray of Abercairney. There William Lord Graham to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, this gudefather, first for forty merks, dated April 30, and next for £73, dated 16th May 1500. The Earl married, previously, Annabella, daughter of Lord Drummond, by whom he had the second Each is a charter granted to William Earl of Montrose and Janet Edmonstone, his wife, of the The marriage of Janet Edmonstone is proved by a receipt in the charter chest by lands of Aberuthven, dated March 17, 1504-5.

NOTE 39, PACE 35.

Lord Ross had Ninian, who succeeded him, married to Lady Janet Stewart, daughter to There are receipts, first, dated 16th November 1496, by John Ross of Halkead Koicht, to Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, fur fifty nierks, for the marriage of John Lord Ross of Melville, and another by John Lord Ross of Halkcad (Halkhead), to William Edmonstone of Duntreath, his 'goodbrother,' for Lito, dated July 30, 1507. There are also charters to John Ross of Melville, and Christian Edmonstone his wife, of the lands of Fortrevane, in the county of Edinburgh, dated 27th September 1490. By this marriage ohn Larl of Lennox. This family ended in the male line by the death of the fourteeath Lord Ross in 1754. The Earl of Glaggow is the heir of the last Lord, and possesses the estate of Hall head.

formed an alliance which was declared illegal. It appears from the original record that Christian Edmonstone duninum de Hall.et actricem, and the honourable person Joha Knollys, ther putative husband, when the official decented that the marriage contracted between them 'de facto et non de jure ignoranter' was null, hecause Grisella Ratray, first wife of the said George, and the abor comentioned Lady Christian 'attingebapt invicemin quarto et quarto gradibus consanguinitatis, and thus the Lady Christian, and the aforesaid George, stood related to each other within the same degrees of affinity. They were After the death of fier husband, who was killed at the battle of Fledden, Lady Ross in 1315 there was a cause before the efficial of Midlothian between the noble Lady accordingly divorced. For this notice I am indebted to Mr. Riddell.

NOTE 40, PAGE 35. There are discharges of 'tocher,' or dower, by Hugh Lord Monigomery, in behalf of his son, one dated 11th November 150, for £ go and 40 metes; small the other; disted 5th Meth 150; £ of 5g metel, "in part of the still Lend's son's techer." It would seem that the families were much set on this commercion, for there is a contract in the Egilmon and Archabal Emission with commercion, for there is a contract in the Egilmon and Archabal Emissions or Ollmitestally, and the 14th 145th Lend Mongiourney and Archabal Emissions or Ollmitestally, signalining that John Mongiourney, son and feel of the size of Lord, shall, for some mary Elizabet, the second, and Lord and Good white, many Elizabet, the second, and falling the second, the third as no full Lond Mongiourney or many Elizabet, the second, and falling the second, the third as no full Mongiourney or many Elizabet, Calterine, Margaret, and Hole, daughter of the said Archaballa. The maninger was carried into effect with John, who came to an unfinely ond, as he was killed during his father's hier first for the triple of the still of the stilled fathous Yield. The content of the Enholm Comment of the Enholm Comment of the Enholm Comment of the Enholm of the Enholm Comment of the Enholm of the Enholm Comment o

NOTE 41, PAGE 35

This marriage is certified by a distange by Water Insthanan of that IR to Six William Edimonousco, and Robert Shaw, Alabord Pixiley (the Ladey-world, for roomets) in part of tocking, countered with Margaret Edimonousce, sister of the said Sit William, and coeting, countered with Margaret Edimonousce, sister of the said Sit William, and Coeting, can and hericapparent to the said Walter. They had a son married to a daughter of William Lord Lingston, and a daughter to Striling of Glotar. The family asker houge criticity, and the parjectty now belongs to and forms the residence of the Dake of Manteroe.

NOTE 42, PAGE 35.

Cracturd says in his stass, 'The alliance of the family of Dannesth with the bouse of Burnback is vouched from authorities in Dannteath's hands, charters under the Great Seatl, and a full collation of the muscles (corrupted from Nonafede, charters under the Great Dannteath of the or or corrupted from Nonafedel, from demontes had not not call the contract of the contract of the best of tay belief.

NOTE 43, PAGE 35.

The Dominium of Montrils and Stratigrantery, with the residence of Dome Casts, sensor to have on part of the regular jointure of taquers of Scotland. It was settled upon Queen Margart on her manings with James the Fourthin is 1903, and was penable upon Queen Wargart on her manings with James the Fourthin is 1903, and was penable abbout the same tine given to 80 Mellium to that advergage, the sign gene of the winterest of the Queen's saider. The tree years after the lattle of Foldot, his saw William, in 156, in is dated 1531. James the Fifth died in December 1542, and the raid took place at Depute of Monteith, for the rents, etc., of the years 1542, 1513, 1544, 1545, discharging also Is declared to be of lawful age, and, with his brother Archibald, had their father's charge continued. This appears to have been done by the Regent Albany during the Queen's residence in England, having been kept from her dower being one of her great complaints against the Government. In 1525 the Earl of Lennox, Sir William and Archibald's brother-in-law, joined the party of the Queen against the Earl of Angus, and in endeavouring to emancipate the young King James the Fifth the Earl was murdered, after his parry had been defeated at Linlithgow by the Earls of Angus and Airan. In the autumn of previous she appeared in the Council to appeal against Sir William Edmonstone's keeping possession of Doune Castle, which she naturally now wished to make over to the care of Methren. Sir William was ordered to surrender it in furty-cigit hours under penalty of prosecution. Sir William had, however, obtained the King's signature to an order for retaining the possession, but this order the Council annulled, though they suspended the execution of the delivery for twelve days. (Acta Dom. Concilii, Register House, July 11, 1527.) As James the Fifth alienated the crown lands of Methyen at the Queen's request to her husband, Methven got the Queen to make over the stewartry of Monteith and constabulary of Doune to his younger brother, Sir James Stewart of Reath. According, however, to Miss Strickland, the Queen was tricked by her husband-he having procured the absolute grant of Monteith and Doune to his brother from the King, for whom he had fought, and was left for dead at Linlithgow. Queen Margaret never meant to lose the income of her dower lands, and this caused their first quarrel. The charter for this grant Dunblane on the Whitsunday of the following year, in which Sir James Stewart lost his life. In 1547 the penalty on account of this transaction was remitted by the Regent Duke of Chatchherault, and the stewartry appears to have been restored to Sir William Edinonstone, for among the family papers is a discharge with the sign manual of the Queen Dowager Mary of Lorraine to Sir William Edmonstone of Dunticath, Chamberlala William Earl of Montrose, and all others concerned. It is dated Edinburgh, April 25, 1549. From this it would appear that the cession of Donne to Sir James Stewart was not field good, and that when Mary of Lorraine came into possession of fier dower lands, on the death of James the Fifth, she restored the stewardship to Sir William Edmonstone, which led to the raid above mentioned, and that during the time Sir William was probably in seclusion on account of Stewart's death the administration of the reuts was made over to Sir William's near relation, the Earl of Montrose. On her mother's death, when the dower Lands would revert to the crown, Queen Mary committed the stewartry of Doune to the Earl of Montrose in 1560, but three years later the son of Sir James Stewart recovered 1527 the Queen married Harry Stewart, who was created Lord Methven, and in the July sossession, and the lands of Doune, were erected into a Bareny in his favous in 1580.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

OTE 41. PAGE 16.

As regards the Lady Elizabeth Leslie, I amindebted to Mr. Riddell for a copy of the original indement earth ships of Lindores dated October 14, 1455, beneird Goorge, Earl Goorge, Earl Goorge, Earl Goorge, Earl Goorge, Sand Charles, and William, Earl of Eroto, to the intent that the latter Earl shall marple land the dependant of the Rome can be obtained, the depther to the Earl Earl of Earl of Goorge on any delipsemation from Rome can be obtained, the optimized that the Earl Earl of Earl of Goorge on any delipsematic delipsematic of the shall go according that what cost no requests are made previously delible jointy paid. A houseshow force is forced as the Lady's purious. The Robert of the earlshame of an except latter from the original in the Errol charter elect at Share Castle, by Mr. Riddell.

NOTES TO GENERLOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

NOTE 45, PAGE 37.

There is, however, a bond at Stirling, 28th October 1555, between Colin Campbell (Openher and secesors to St. John of Generally for himster, he the part of Christian, dangered return unquilse St. John, on the one part, and john Codeptonen of Louss and his brother James on the other, by which it was agreed that the said James should marry Christian. Campbell, and the ten pound hand of Curraine be settled on them by the said Opin Codiptions; also that a dispension be procured for the marriage.

NOTE 46, PAGE 38.

The late Mr. Bochana of Cambanance, who was related to the Newton family, informed me that head one see was a parion to jours Edmonator for this shapfler, but it was unfortunately but. The fead, however, feweren the families hop continued; in chirty years after, three is a book of manner by William Edmonator to the son of Sir James Stewart, by which it appears to be family settled. The bond is remarkable, it has ferminated on file Earl of Motton, then Regert, by William Edmonator to come under an old-lightion of frament, that is, to support in all quantity, as service to a superior, was given to many years ago by Mr. Buchana, but the ordering a superior, was given to many years ago by Mr. Buchana, but the original Dave since core, which it is an formous form the procession of the Earl of Manay, but has since passed into other hands.

18x. By threes, convent, and authority of our right trait cousin James Ethe of Materian Jean-day to specify the control that for understand that for the retearding of the deality feed and comity contracted through the shaders of outpublic James Stewart of Bail Britony, factor to our wichbileti james Stewart of Boards. Next, to our wichbileti james Stewart of Doards (Next, our outpublic james Stewart of Doards (Next, our outpublic james Stewart of Doards (Next, our outpublic james Stewart outpublic james Jennation and assistance of Doards), which is now hand of mannent to be made and given by the vid now public james james Jennation and james Andread of Jennation to be made and given by the vid now public size steward to the sixty conformation to the control outpublic size of the list sixty conforms to the foundation and apparent make Levive file sade, parties ancen the sould shadened make Levive file sade, parties ancen the sould shadeling their day and for flivings of the public sade in the soil shadeling, their fair and for flivings only.

1 Record of Funds and Obligations, vol. iii.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

5

Ricenes to the same Janes Stowart to receive the said band or said Regen, we grant and give laces to the same Janes Stowart to receive the said band of manera for anysphement and satisfaction in ane part for the sharcher of his said unmahile fuller, conform to the said context and appointment, and will and grant that the said June and his sits thall not incur any pains, paired, danger or histill in their persons, lands, or guide dither throw carefulge or giving directs, nonvilathanding out Are of Parliament undersyin analig or to be mad in the contait, or any pains, contained the territorial, anone the whilst we dispense with the said plante Stewart and his airs and with the greans, givers of the said Band Command, and their sins for every lathes presents, whill we conside the Lodes of counsale and Sessions to intext and register in the buils of Commaid and Sessions to intext and register in the buils of Commaid and Sessions to larve any or any pains and substitute hy our said Regent at Dableith the 23th day of March, and of our reign the paper, 55%.

The impression of the Scal is lost.

AMES RECENT.

Nort 47, Port 39

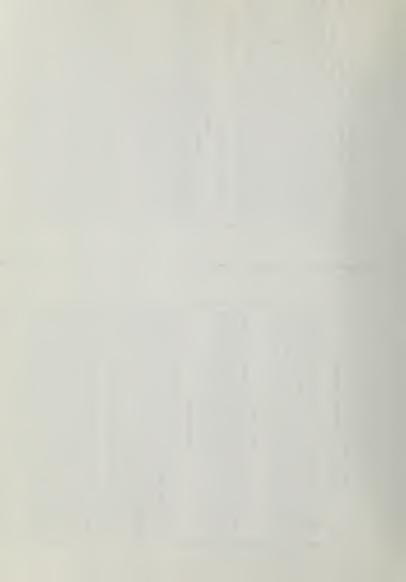

There is a charter by Kenigern Graham of Returnys in Strathern, in implement of part of marrings contact between me and an honourable man William Edunousone of Doutresth Higher tenencerial graden justice and an anoual apparent between the contact and shaping the Edunousone, my faute only dependent between the Strather General Strather Care The William Strather General Strather S

NOTE 48, PAGE 40.

John Master of Graham (who succeeded his grandfather as third Earl of Montrose in the same year) is a witness, with others of the Edmonstones.

Fire hade of Exister-garden and better made over to parts: Librationstone by his father Sir William in 1964, and also the ten pound land of old vetter of Palliets on the Leven, the anxietus sait of the older Leits of Lemma, which Sir William had produbly obtained from the present on the present must be existent on the fire that many must not be excession of the fifty williamly manified with the Lady Appens Stevart. This was in 1965, In order, however, to earth order of the Lady Appens Stevart. This was in 1966, In order, however, to earth order of the Lady Appens Stevart. This was in 1966, In order, however, to earth order of the Lady Appens Stevart. This was in 1966, In order, however, to earth order of the Lady Appens 1979, which belong the Medica in the town of the Rich's insuans. Even, Lad of Andrey, there is a chance of remenciation dated August 1579, of the excession of the Lands of Hallen in consideration of the reviews of the Medica in the form of St. James, "Fernanning the India's in consideration of the services of his decreases the Appens 1978, received red for home of the Chance of Palliams (Almonstone of Duritech). Twisting with a revealed held been made by William Pallianessone of Duritech's This are commented by Williams Pallianessone of Duritech in the same unquille Matther, Each here of Lennox, of the lands of Dalloch, with Millpair of Contenant, the sum of 1000 merks,1 of the date at Glasgow Jan. 20, 1566.

John Graham of Knockdoleane and John Stuart, fiar of Barscube, became surcites for Sir John Edmonstone of that Ilk, James Edmonstone of Duntreath, Knight, and Janes alius Jacob Ednionstone of Newton, as principals, for themselves; and James. Dundome, Knight, for himself, that they should observe the contents of certain letters of Slains, dated November 25, 1507, granted by the chief kinsmen of the father's and mother's side of umquhile Mango Edmonstone, brother of James alias Jacob Edmonstone of Newton, who was slain within the burgh of Stirling in November 1585, under pain of perjury, infamy, and of perpetual credit, honour and estimation for ever, under pain of Commendator of Inchaffray, and Harry Lindsay of Kinfawns for Sir James Chisholme of Soo merks

NOTE 49, PAGE 44

This matter is thus given in Pitenirn's Criminal Trials :-

to some strength in the isles and borders of this realm, or else to some strength in Raid of Ruthven, Fels 9, 1534-5, 18 James the Sixth. Malcolm Douglas of Mains, John Cunningham of Drunguhassill, James Edmonstone of Duntreath accused, that with Robert Hamilton of Inchmachan, John Cunningham of Drumquhassill, Malcolin Douglas of Mains, John Muschett, and Walter Douglas, in October, November, December, and lanuary past, upon the plot laid by the sometime Earls of Angus and Marr and their complices for treasonable deeds presently fugitives in England, communicated to you by John Home alias Black John, their messenger, and the said John Muschet, how His Majesty's most noble person at the hunting might have been taken captive and conveyed the isles of Lochlomond, while the said declared traitors, fugitives, had with their complices received his most nuble person in their hands and concealing the same. Cunningham, having been partaker in the treasonable attempt in August 1582 to take the King captive at Ruthven House, and pardoned, is indited for having entered into a new conspiracy for scizing on the King, the same as James Edmonstone, and having consulted with James Edmonstone several times at the Kirk of Strathblane and of Killearn

Malcolm Douglas for conspiracy with others how the King might be seited and conupon the execution of the enterprise. reyed to some strength.

confession) the seizing of the King, but guilty of concealing. Cunningham and Dauglas Edmonstone and Hamilton having, confessed, sentence was pronounced before Load Hay of Yester, Head of the Assize, that Douglas of Mains did not approve (by Duntreath's sentenced to be hanged, drawn and quartered at the Market-Cros. Edinburgh.

Acts of Parliament for 1581, vol. iii.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

NOTE 50, PAGE 44.

If Cunningham of Tourlands was, as seems likely, of the family of Cunninghamhead. this gentleman must have been nearly connected with Sir James Edmonstone, for Sir James's daurhter married John Conningham of Cunninghamhead, and James his grandson, married the daugliter of Cunninghamhead. These were indeed miserable times, destructive alike of personal honour and family ties.

NOTE 51, PAGE 45.

Ogilvic had been previously impannelled and tried before the Provost and Bailies of Glasgow. He was accused of saying, and seducing others to attend, Mass at Clasgow, and on his trial he confessed his allegiance to the Pore. The process was characteristic of the age, for, says Calderwood,1 'he was not suffered to take sleep some nights and days together. His brains being light, some secrets were extracted from him. He was of course found guilty and hanged.

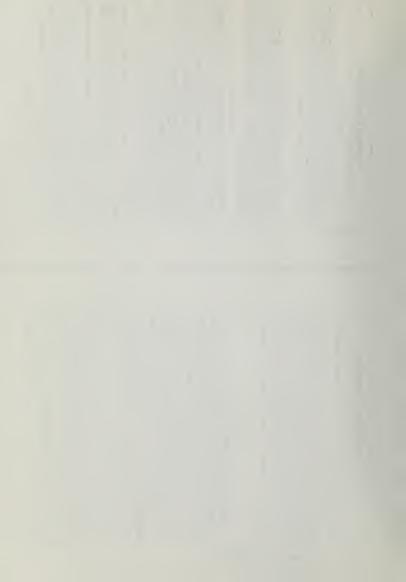

NOTE 52, PAGE 46.

In the Session of the General Assembly of October 1381, a commission was appointed to take into consideration a question put by the King. In case the Kirk damned the office of Bishop, whereunto is annexed also a temporal jurisdiction wherein the Kirk is served by voting in Parliament, assisting in His Highness Council, contribution in taxation, and sicklike, what overture they would show, whereby the King could not be prejudiced by taking away that state. For the advising of this head, which the Assembly thought very weighty, and of great consequence, a commission was named in which was William Edinonstane. I apjurchend, however, this was not the eldest son of Sir James, but the minister of Cargill, for the Kirk at the same Session appointed 'certain brethren to travail in erection of Presby teries,' and Mr. William Edmonstone was named among others for Perth and Strathem. Who this minister was I have no clue to ascertain.

The following references are from History of Presbyterian Church in Ireland, by 1611. Edinousione of Broadisland among the officers under Lord Claneboye opposed to the Irish Rebels. Mr. Edmonstone of Broadisland dispatched by Lord Chichester and others to purchase muskets, swords, and pikes at Edinburgh, with a commission to 'James Edmondstoone of Die 'yland, Esquire,' delivered by him at Edin-James Seaton Reid :--

The Scotch and Unglish armies under General Monro and Lord Montgomery of Ards, having suffered a reverse from the Hish in 1616, "Mr. John Edmonstone of Ballybrochin in Broadisland, a member of a family bong distinguished for their benevolence and public spirit, and their warm support of the Presbyterian Church,' says Dr. Reid, was sent as ruling older to attend the General Assembly in Edinburgh, to procure assistance in the existing state of the Irish Preshyterians. In a note Dr. Reid says, 'The Edmonstone burgh, dated 21st January 1642.

Book of the Universal Kirk. Calders cod's History, vel. vii. p. 193

samily resided long at Broadisland, where they set an example of piety, condescension, charity, and osciulness, and caused their removal (when the estate was sold in 1280), to be felt as a public loss. In 1653 Cromwell formed a plan for translating the leading Scottish Presbyterians of Ulster into Munster, and the name of Captain Edmonstone is found among the number. This scheme was however soon given up.

Page 103 and 186. In the Irish war in 1689 'Col. Edmonstone of Broadisland embodied three hundred foot, with part of which he garrisoned his house, Red Hall, near Carrick Fergus. At the siege of Derry 'Col. Edmonstone, with part of Adair's regiment, was directed to secure the pass at Port Glenone, and prevent the enemy repairing the Bridge. 'Early in the morning of Sunday 7th April a strong body of Hamilton's forces under Col. Nugent, son of the Earl of Westmeath, having secured some boats, succeeded in crossing the Bann, about a mile from Port Glenone, without alarming the Protestant Lt. Col. Shaw, supported by Sir Arthur Randon, who happened to be there, and by five companies under Lt. Col. Whitney.' The post, however, was untenable, and the defenders sentinels. The trenches were defended with great bravery by Edmonstone and his of Port Glenone retreated. 'Col, Edmonstone also contracted those distempers in the trenches of Port Glenone of which he afterwards died at Culmore, April 14th, having behaved himself there and on all other occasions with great gallantry and resolution." Mackenzie, True and Impartial Account, p. 21. Culmore surrendered 23d April.

Nore 53, PAGE 48.

Hans or John Hamilton, first Protestant vicar of Donlop in Ayrshire, was a natural son of Archibald Hamilton of Raploch. By his wife, Margaret Denholme, he had five missioner for the plantation of Longford. He thus acquired property, and, having taken sons. The eldest, James, was originally a schoolmaster, and, it is said, Archbishop Ussher was one of his pupils. Subsequently, being a man of talent, he was appointed a coman active part in the suppression of Tyrone's rebellion, he was, in 1622, created Viscount Chaneboye, and was much employed during the reigns of James the Dirst and Charles the First. His eldest son was made Earl of Chabrassil, but this hue of the family with the prerage ended in the third generation.1 Archibald Hamilton, second son of Hans, married Rachel, daughter of Walter Carmichael of Hynford, sister to Janes, first Lord Carmichael. By her he had four sons and a daughter, Jean, married first to Archibald Edmonstoac of Durireath, and secondly to Sir William Mure of Rowallan.

NOTE 54, PAGE 49.

The work from which the above quotations are made is a quarto volume printed in 1818, entitled 'Law's Memorialls from 1638-1684, principally of prodigies and wonders among other events." He was a Presbyterian Minister, and was curiously credulous and superatitious. Of the Dunb Laird of Duntreath, a local tradition has been preserved that on one Sunday when the family were going to the Kirk, and it was intimated to him that he could not accompany, he went into the stable and began eating hay as if to show that if not fit to attend public worship, he ought to live among the cattle. A seal ring and a few other memorials of this remarkable person are presented.

9 Sportiswoode's Miscellany, vol. l. p. 126, note.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

NOTE 55, PACE 52.

acts are given, and it is added, Col. Edinonstone's valour was spoken highly of, but bis resistance was useless for want of support. In the notes to the same work is the follow. ing: 'The Armagh manuscript (of the siege of Londonderry) thus mentions the Earl of Mount Alexander, and Edmonstone Laird of Duntreath, the latter of whom died at Culmore Fort, 14 April 1689, in consequence of diseases contracted in the trenches of In a work called Derriana, relating chiefly to the famous siege of Londonderry, and which was compiled from a contemporary narrative by the Rev J. Mackenine, the same Port Glenone, where he had behaved himself with great gallantry and resolution."

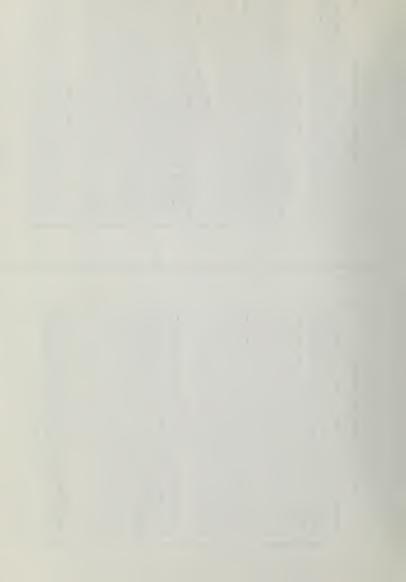

It has been stated in note 34 that the remains of this gentleman were discovered ying above those of the Countess of Angus in the Church of Strathblane in 1844.

NOTE 56, PAGE 52.

indenture dated April 17, 1666, Anna Helena (Scott) Adair is to receive £100 per an sterling as jointure from the Adair estates (only however part of what is legally due). Mr. Edmonstone assigns to her a yearly rent charge of £166, 13s. 4d. sterling, for her life, "to be paid yearly at the two Feasts of Philip and Jacob, and all Saints; also, in case of survivorship, to have any house belonging to Mr. I., except the mansion-house of Duntreath, to pay rent for lands attached not exceeding thirty acres. The estates charged with £1300 for three daughters, the eldest 600, the seened 400, the third 300, if two, to be The late Sir Walter Scott told me that the Scotts of Harwood were a cadet of the Harden family, now represented by Lord Polwarth, of which stock himself was. Col. Scott was killed at the battle of Dunbar 1650, where he commanded a regiment of cavalry gainst Cromwell. The banner the regiment bore at that battle is in my possession. Lady Adair, who, however, drupt her first husband's title, had the management of affairs udging by her portrait in the family collection, there was something very distinguished in her air and appearance. Her mother was Dutch, but I have lost the name. By the for her son during his minority, and would seem to have possessed superior abilities, and, divided between them, if one, to have the whole. (No mention of younger sons.)

NOTE 57, PACE 53.

The Montgomeries of Rosemount were descended from the Eglinton family. Sir Hugh, the sixth Laird of Braidstone, was raised to the Irish Peccage as Viscount Montgomery, and the James Montgomery who married Elizabeth Edmonstone was son of Sir ames, second son of the first Viscount. The third Viscount was created Earl of Mount Alexander in 1661. The sons of the above marriage became next in the line of succession, but predeceased the last Earl, by whose death the titles became extinct in 1758.

88

NOTE 58, PAGE 53.

Arehibald, minh Earl of Argale, who was executed for high treason at Edinbugh in 165, ph in Step, Lardy May Goswart, draighten to the Earl of Armsy, had form ann and three daughters, of whom the eldert, Archibald, was created first Dake of Argale, and Creacechel, in a ducked my live to san, plan the etchelouble of Argale and Creacechel, who had no be dependent; and was defined Early in the credit of 164s, sho but to no digital plan, second son of the Early mavried Elicabeth, eldest daughter of Juhn eighth Lord Elphinistory, by whom he had four sons, First, Juhn, who on the cloth of his cosmissureded to the distriction, married the Honourable May Delleuden, daughter of Juhn eighth Lord Littlemen, from whom the research from the control of the high treason, and sith, Elizabeth, ded unmarried.

NOTE 59, PAGE 54.

The Harcres were an ancient family settled in Normandy before the Conquest. In the Gallery éter Cristairs a si précise y et conduit su vival et de l'accomba de la larcres under the "all no drinch. The story told by Monsieur de Conduinieus high att the aucrester of the Harcres le Condu éte Conduinieus at the first crusade conquered the valley of the Harcres le Condui de Conduinieus at the first crusade conquered the valley of the manner, and note the Princess of Antiech, to whom it belonguit, equities, and then souried the Princess and rook the manne of Condumnia. It is problema.

lical enough

The Precide foundy is more respected by the Comite de Tancourit, who has succeeded to the speciety of the De Precises in Namentaly, being descended from another branch of the Harrone. The Combonities as was a finial branch. They were considered branch of the Harrone. The Combonities as third branch. They were considered to England and took the English cannot of Harrying, and obtained property in the England and took the English ranne of Harrying of Herring, and obtained property in Describing, of Allon there is no deciment to Larre the content of William's Namionis of Harrying or throating the interior of Larry and Properties of the victims of Larry and Sangara and Mangara de Preservation of the victims of Larry Name Harrone, probably as which the Anger all practices of the victims of Larry Sangara Harring, but which the Precision of Anger's son, particular, probably as which the sand spain sold by his son Branch issum to Ladd Desley.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

NOTE 60, PAGE 56.

The family of Willrog ham or Willeabann was settled in Cheabite in the middle of the 13th century, that the ES Richard domined tensive property by meralge with the histories of the Verman and Yendels Lamines, and himself was seroed Shorff for the compute in 529. The delet branch terminated by the marriage of Goret daughter and heirest of Sir Thomas Willscham of Woodlay, with LionA Tolemenbe, Earl of Dysar, the angel of the property of the Company of the LionA Tolemenbe, End Objard, was sorth, Reger Willedham, Eq of Nantwish, in shown the male time of the family was confuned, he was sorth, Reger (Almer of George Willrelham of Nantwish, and Dehmere House, and Robert Boolet, Eng of Landam House, a propriety previously in possession of the Earl of Robert Boolet, Eng of Landam House, a propriety previously in possession of the Earl of Dauly. The Boolets studd for some generations in the county of Lancaster. From his marings there were two posts and six daughters.

1. Edward, created Daron Stehnersdale of Stehnersdale in 1825, married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Edward Taylor of Bifrons, in Kon, by chom to had-Elitabeth, dangihte of the Rev. Edward Taylor of Hifons, in Kent, by shom he had—

1. Richard, bedied in felt, married Jessy, dangihter of Sir Richard Brooks of Norton, Baronet, by bother he had one son and three daughter.

2. Edward, married Emily, daughter of James Rambottom, Eq., by whom he has had a son and three daughters.

3. Mary Charlotte.

4. Emma Caroline, married Edward Lord Stanley, eldest son of Edward, thirteemb Earl Otelty date Secretary of State for the Colonies), by whom she has two soms nod a daugher.

11. Randle, of whom hereafter (Note 62).
111. Anne Dorothea, married Richard Pepper, First Lord Alvanley, Master of the Rolls, and afterwards Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, by whom she had—

1. William, accord I and Alvanley, died November 1849.

2. Richard Pepper, third Lord Alvanley, married Lady Arabella Vane, daughter of Wilham, fost Duke of Clevebard.

3. Frances: Hemistia, maxifed Sir John Warrender of Lochend, Bart, by whom she has a denglier; and has a chapturer; and

4. Catherine Theth.
IV. Many, manried William Egerton of Tatton Park, Cheshite, Esq., by whom she.

had two sons and a daughter :—

"Whitaham warried Erabeth, daughter of Sir Christopher Syles of Stedener, In Vorshine, puraried Erabeth, daughter of Sir Christopher Syles of Stedener,
In Yorkshine, payaleme he had for sons and adorghter—first, William Tstom, married Lady Charlotte Loftor, daughter to John, second Marquis of Ely, by whom he had two sons after daughter as ground, William ham, gled 1857, pittuit Thomas gled 1857, married Charlotte, daughter of Sir William Miltor of Nunspicton in Yoskshire, Baronet, pr

NOTES TO GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF

whom he had four sons and three daughters; fourth, Edward Christopher, married Lady Mary Pierrepont, daughter of Charles, second Earl Manvers, by whom he has issue; fifth, Charles, married Margaret, daughter of the Hon. Sir Edward Cust; sixth, Charlotte.

2. Thomas, second son of William Egerton, took the family name of Tatton, and married Finnia, daughter of the Hon. John Grey, son of Harry, fourth Earl of Stamford, by whom he had a son and six daughters.

3. Mary Elizabeth, daughter of William Egerton, married, first, Sir Mark Masterman Sykes of Stedmere, Barnnet, and secondly, Stratford Dugdale of Merevale, Warwickshire, Esq.

V. Frances Alicia, married Antony Hardolph Eyre, Esq. of Grove Notts, by whom first, Mary Letitia, married Charles, second Earl Manvers, by whom she had Charles, Viscount Newark, married Emily, daughter of Edward, Lord Hatherton, died 1849; Sydney Herbert, Viscount Newark, and two daughters, Mary, married Edward C. Egerton, Esq., and Annora; second, Frances Julia, married Granville, son of the Hon. Edward Vernon Harcourt, Archbishop of York, by whom she had five sons, and a daugliter married to Humphrey St. John Mildmay ; third, Henrietta married, first, John she had one son, Gervase, killed at the battle of Barossa in 1811, and three daughters :

VI. Sybylla, married William Ffarrington, Esq. of Shaw Hall, Lancashire, by whom Eyre, Esq., and second, Henry Gally, Knight, Esq. of Langold, Notts.

she had two daughters: Sylylla, wife of S. Scarisbrick, Esq., of Scarisbrick, Lancashire, VII. Emma, married Charles Edmonstone, Esq., afterwards Sir Charles Edmonand Frances.

VIII. Elizabeth, married Rev. William Barnet, Rector of Richmond, Yorkshire, and fterwards of Brixton, Deverill, Wills. stone, Baronet.

NOTE 61, PAGE 56.

The Hathams are lineally descended from Sir John de Trehouse, who obtained from Sir Beaumont, seventh Baronet, had five sous: first, Sir Charles, second, Sir John, Bishop of Clucher in Irchand; third, William, first Lard Hotham; fourth, Beaumont, second Lord the Conqueror the Manor of Hotham in Vorkshire, whence the family took the name. Hotham; fifth, George.

Beaumout, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, succeeded to the Irish Pecrage and Baronetey on the death of his mother William. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Thomas Hankey, Knight, and widow of James Norman, Esq., by whom he had --

1. Beaumont, dud before his father married Philadelphia, daughter of Sir John Dyke, Bart, of Lullingstone Castle, Kent, by whom he had Reaumont, third Lord Hotham. George Frederick married Lady Susan O'Brien, daughter of William, second Marquis of Thomond, by whom he has issue; and Frances Philadelphia died unmarried.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

2. Frederick, in Holy Orders, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Hodge of Hempstead Place, Kent, by whom he has Sir Charles, K.C.B., and four other sons and five daughters.

3. Vice. Admiral Sir Henry, G.C.B., married Lady Frances Rous, daughter of John, first Earl of Stradbroke, by whom he had three sons.

4. Frances, married Vice. Admiral Sir John Sutton, G.C.B., by whom she had a son 5. Amelia, married John Woodcock, Esq , of Lincoln's Inn, by whom she had a son and two daughters.

8. Louisa, married, first, Sir Charles Edmonstene, Baronet, and secondly, Charles and two daughters. Woodcock, Esq.

NOTE 62, PAGE 57.

paternal property of Rode Hall, the maternal Lathon House having been assigned to his elder brother. He married, first, Letitia, sole daughter and heiress of the Rev. Edward Rudd, of Durham, by Letitia, daughter of John Arden of Harden, Esq., in Cheshire, and Pepper Hall, Vorkshire, sister to Richard Pepper, first Lord Alvanley. By this marriage he had, first, Randle, married Siliella, daughter of William Farrion of Gresford Lodge, Esq.; second, Edward, died unmarried; third, Mary Letitia, married Joseph Harrison Fryct, Esq.; fourth, Frances Maria, died unmarried ; fifth, Emma, married Sir Randle Wilbraham, Esq., second son of Wilbraham Bootle, Esq., succeeded to the Archibald Edmonstone, Baronet, as above.

Esq., by whom, who died in May 1849, he had one daughter Carbetine; third, Francis seconti, Emily; eighth, Charlotte, married to the Rev. Francis Twemlow, Incumbent of Mr. Wilbraham married, secondly, Subylla, daughter of John Fgerton of Egerton and Outton in Cheshire, whose brother Sir John succeeded to the Baronetey on the death of Thomas, first Farl of Wilton. By this marriage Mr. Wilhesham has had three sons and five daughters; first, Charles Philip, in Holy Orders, Vicar of Andley; second, Richard, Major in the army, merried 1 lizabeth, youngest daughter of William Egerton of Gresford, Henry Randle; fourth, Sibylla Float, th; fifth, Henrictta; sixth, Frances Maria; Smallwood, Cheshire. She died in December 1853, leaving a son and daughter.

COLZIUM, April 1851.

Ξ

GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT OF THE ELDER BRANCH OF THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

HAURGE in the preceding narrative brought down the descent of the elder branch of Reductions and Alloman to the side generation, propose now to confined it as far as my material allow, which are derived first from the Edman Genelogy, which however, each thick person with the person 15% and 8, mercores, not much to be depreded upon, and chiefly from the information afforded by the older charters of Edmonstone, which Mit. Vasualops from the information afforded by the older charters of Edmonstone, which Mit. Vasualops genelogy thus produced is not so distinct and statisfactory, at that of Duntenh, still it is sufficient to elucidate the descent. I round premise that in this patient the spelling of the more appearing in ancient decoments in various shopes. The more modern description by the elder branch is adopted. On this there generally employed. The six generalisms referred to above are—11, Harryi and John; 440, John; 440, Jowel 19, John; 441, David 194, person from the generalisms referred to above are—11, Harryi and John; 440, Jowel 194, David 194,

James; 604, John married Margaret, daughter to William Maidead of Therbitane, This bast John married Margaret, daughter to William Maidead of Operation accessor of the Ladochale Guilla, According to the Ladochale Guilla, sea of after a statistic for this soarings coming within the problinked degree. This wast darfer 145, and the following year John Planosytome getta, Bull from Paye Immeent the Lighth, Juling Jiang and 31 life concerns under the protection of the Chunch.

There is a curious industries made at Danfermine, duted 33d of July 460, between Plate is decrined industries and William Prevent of Chipalith, whereby it is consumed that Julin, the Chick 4 is a most diven for the decreasing Julian National, the external constitution of the chickest and Chipalith and Plate and Chipalith and Ch which it is not necessary to follow up.

This John, referred to in the indenture, seems to have succeeded his father, for in

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

1483 John Edmondstoure of that IIk was appointed explain of the barder eastles of Cessford, Edgetten, and Omiston, at the time of the invasion of the English under Richard, to Concesser, afterwards Richard the Third, with the Duke of Albany and a band of reled nothers

In 1499 there is a scheme transaction whereby John Fdmondstoune of that IR populare the variance of the start from John, his son and hear, and the effect of the school and a varyange of his Start from John, his son and hear, and the effect of the school securing the school charles. It would seem, however, that this john ded before his later, and the school securing of resignation by John Edmondstoune of the lank of Edmonstoue to his son David Egmont more and the school securing the stone as heir to his brother David. It is dated January 20, 1512.

There is a recept of a savine of a week later by the same Archbishop of the lands of Edmonstone as above.

In a legal transaction, dated 1507, James Edmondstoure of Ednam is designated as Knight.

It seems likely that Sir James fell with his surection. Alexander, Archbishon of St.

It seems likely that Sir James (ell with his superior, Alexander, Archisidop of St. Andrews (natural one) James frouth, a very song mani, and he battle of Flodden, for, as the battle octured in September 151, in February 1913 (which would now be 1514, as the year, was then relealated as commencing in March), there is a precept of sixin, detel hundreline, staining that John says the seem and Leir of James, who had died in possession of the India of Edmonstone.

In John martied. Displanish, draggliter of Waterboge of Niddry, by whom he had after some job and how accessed hem; James, and Paritied. It reports to have taken part in that tremahable and frighted test, nonely, the tild of Lady Janet Progles, since the tild the tremahable and frighted test, nonely, the tild of Lady Janet Progles, since the test of Angrey, where C Lard Chammis, and wife of Archibald Campbell of James the Fifth by pasion and workers. John Elimonhasmure of their Wise general parts the Elith by pasion and workers. John Elimonhasmure of their Wise general that the Lad of Andral and budges, says on the Archiga, and the unfortunate haly was condemond to be burnt after. There death, says Caldarcood, was most budge was condemond to be burnt after. There death, says Caldarcood, was most all becomes to a say jed dark hand a plant when the brangly the compge at her most of all necessers, and my crime committed, had bought berto that end. Her hashand was killed by falling from the walls of the earlier frainbudge white trigg to scape. These was detained in prison duning the King's lift, and drewards resported to bip partitionsy. "The accusery."

Black Acts, folio 66.

8

rigour, or of his furfeiture of their lands. His anger against the Douglas was implacable." continues Calderwood, 'was one William Lyn. He repented, but too late, of his calumnies, and confessed his wicked purpose to the King, but the King relented muthing of his This dreadful tragedy took place in July 1537.1

and executed for having been concerned in the murder of Lord Darnley. Who this In 1567 Captain Blackater, James Edmondstoune, and others were tried, lortured, lames Edinondstoune was does not appear. There was no proof of their guilt brought John Edmondstoune was appointed one of the Association to protect King James about this time, but this was the son, for the futher died in 1565, as is shown by a precept of cline coustit, declaring John to have succeeded to his father John of that Ilk. During his father's lifetime this gentleman had been summoned to Parliament. forward, but that was not necessary in those wicked times.

In the year 1567, being now styled Sir John of that Ilk, he, with sundry peers, at the bead of which were the Regent Murray and the Earl of Huntly, signed a bond of associahowever, or the result of this proclamation, does not appear; but in 1589 we find him Niddry, who had been concerned in the slaughter of the Laird of Shireffhall, and his brother John Giffard.1 The affair was brought to trial, and Lord Hume, Sir John Edmondstoune, and others, were the pursuers of Wavehope, who, in the meanwhile, escaped. Whether it was apon this occasion or any other, but in 1591 we find David Edmondstoune of Woolnet (a cadet of the family) and James Lawson of Hunthie bound for Sir John Edmondstoune of that Ilk, that he himself, and all he is obliged to answer for by the laws of realm, shall keep the King's peace under the penalty of Lycoo. This is dated November Sir John married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Kerr of Cessford, grandfather to the first Earl of Rayburgh. I presume this is the 'old Lady Edmonstoune' who is stated in Pitcain's Criminal Trials to have been one who consulted Agnes Simpson, a tion to protect King James on his mother's abdication. This bond is dated Edinburgh, 1567. In 1587 Sir John was proclaimed a rebel, with others ;-what was the occasion, engaged in a breach of the peace, by attacking Archibald Wauchope, the young Laird of 13, 1591.

Sir John Litmondstonne died in 1892, and was succeeded by his son Andrew.

witch, in 1591.

was Fuighted, as there is an inquest de tutela of Dominus Johannes Edmonstoun de Andrew his fether, dated December 21, 1625. In the following year he finally dispused This gentleman mortgaged the estate of Edmonstane in 1612 to Master Thomas Hope, Advocate. He married Many Gordon, and was succeeded by his son John, who codem miles, of James Edmonstonne of Newtonn, the son of Andrew de codem, dated July 9, 1619; and there is a general retour of Sir John Edmeston of that Ilk as heir of of the estate of I disconstoune to Mr. James Raith, Advocate. He married Janet Lawson, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. There is a special retour of hun as heir to his 9 Caldernood, History of the Kirk of Scotland, 10l. v. p. 56. 1 Keith, History of the Charch and State in Scot-1 Calderwood, History of the Kink, rol. 1. land, 101, 11, p. 652.

THE FAMILY OF EDMONSTONE.

father, Sir John, in the barony of Ednam, the advowson of the Hospital of Ednam, and other lands in Roxburgh; also as successor to his father in the office of Coroner of the portion of Lothian extending from Avenbrig to Colbrandpath, which office had been held in continued descent from the time it was granted to Sir John, husband of the Countess Andrew was succeeded by his son of the same name, who was retoured December of Douglas. This retour is dated November 8, 1633.

12, 1665. He married Isobel, daughter of Sir A. Don of Newton Don, by whom he had five sons :--

t. Andrew, married Miss Paterson of Eccles, by whom he had one daughter, who lied anmarried.

2. James, who succeeded to his brother, in the Edinburgh University, is now the representative of this ancient line. 4. Thomas; 3. Patrick, married Miss Cox, by whom he had one daughter, Isobel, married to William, second son of Aytoun of Inclidairnic, by whom he had a son Roger, who died in 1843; whose son William Edmondstoune Aytoun, the distinguished Professor of Rhetoric 5. Gideon, both died unmarried. Likewise two daughters, Isobel, married William Hog,

James married Miss Pringle of Clifton, by whom he had James, who succeeded him, and five daugliters; Isohel, married Theodore Il. ron Newhoff, King of Corsica; and and Margaret, married to Hepburn of Humbie, neither of whom left descendants. lanct, Violet, Ann, and Patricia. Ann, the last survivor, died in 1826, aged 102.

James died unmarried in 1772, and with him the male line capited. He had previously sold the estate of Ednam, and purchased that of Cora House, which, as mentioned before, the last Miss Edmondstoune bequeatlied to George Cranstoun, Esq., Lord Cork

DATE DUE
NOV 18 1993
TOO VOO
AUG 2 8 1998
AUG 2 8 1998
DEMCD 38-297

